AROUND THE FARM

By Don Coin Walrod

With Canada thistle down blowing in most parts of the county, a constant stream of questions are being asked with the general thought being, "Why isn't something being done to control Canada thistle?" These inquiries come by letter, by phone, and by callers to the extension office.

These questions reveal a general knowledge that the state has a weed control law and the fact that some areas, such as Washington county, have a compulsory Canada thistle control law, but a lack of understanding of the details of the weed control programs being conducted.

Oregon law provides for the control of noxious weeds when so designated. The entire county may be designated as a weed control district as Columbia county is for tansy ragwort. If certain weeds are not named as noxious and falling under the provisions of a county control district, interested parties may petition for a special weed control district.

The petition for a special control district would include the boundaries and the specific weeds to be controlled by preventing from producing seed. The petition must carry the signatures of not less than seven farm owners constituting a majority of farm owners in the described area. If this is done, the law provides that the county court declare the area a weed control district for the weeds indicated.

After a weed control district is created, Oregon law provides the weed inspector with right of entry to the land within the district. If landowners do not voluntarily comply with the provisions of the weed control law, the inspector posts the property. If the weeds are not controlled within the specified time indicated, the matter is turned over to the district attorney and the county court. Upon authorization from the court the weed inspector can then go upon the land, employing assistants to destroy the weed involved. Upon completion of the weed removal, the costs of such work are filed with the county clerk who enters them on a lien docket as a first lien upon the land except for taxes.

Generally the cooperation of landowners in the county has been good as far as tansy ragwort is concerned, although there are isolated instances in which problems have arisen.

Many large land owners, rather than do the job of spraying and otherwise removing tansy ragwort, have requested that County Weed Inspector Henry Thompson hire crews to go in and do the job for them.

Now that tansy ragwort is well along in bloom, the only real solution to control is to pull the plants, cut the heads and burn them. If plants are only pulled, there is enough vitality in the plants to complete the maturing of the seed. Even if sprays that will kill mature plants are used, there will still be mature seed left to contaminate the area. This was well demonstrated several years ago when one operator sprayed mature tansy ragwort with chlorate. The plants were killed readily, but after drying, seeds were pulled at random from the standing plants. Upon checking with the Oregon State University seed laboratory, it was found that the seed had a germination of 61 percent — enough to keep the tansy ragwort growing there for some time to come.

The similarity between names of common ragweed and tansy ragwort is unfortunate in that it leads to much confusion. Most folks who are native of the area do not know common ragweed since relatively little grows in Oregon, partially due to the diligence exercised by the state in controlling it through the efforts of the state department of agriculture.

Student Nurse Plan Offered

The U. S. Navy has a very attractive program open for student nurses enrolled in colleges and universities accredited by the National League for Nursing wherein girls who have completed the first semester of their sophomore year are eligible to make application for the Navy Nurse Corps Candidate program.

Student nurses selected under this program are enlisted in the U. S. Navy as Officer Candidate Hospitalmen and are placed on active duty with pay during their final two years at school. Tuition and fees, medical and dental care, 30 days paid vacation a year plus pay and allowances of approximately $228 are paid during the final two school terms. Six months prior to graduation, candidates are given a commission as Ensign in the U. S. Navy Nurse Corps with corresponding increases in pay to approximately $355 per month.

In return, student nurses must agree to serve on active duty for up to three years as commissioned officers in the Navy Nurse Corps. Upon graduation from nursing school, candidates attend an eight week indoctrination course at Newport, Rhode Island and then are transferred to their duty station. Every effort is made to locate them in the locality they request. Freshman, sophomore and junior girls can check their eligibility for this program by contacting the local Navy recruiter, Chief Card at Portland or writing to the Office of Naval Officer Procurement, 520 S.W. Morrison St., Portland, Oregon.

Informational Representative.)

QUESTION: When will the Youth Opportunities offices be in operation in Oregon.

ANSWER: At the present time, plans are being made to establish a youth opportunities office in the Portland area and at present this is the only office scheduled for the State of Oregon. It is felt that the need for a youth office in the Portland area is the most critical at this time. Youth counselors, some of whom are now taking training at the University of Oregon will be part of the staff in this Portland office and attempt to find suitable employment for unemployed youth or recommend suitable training for those needing it. In the meantime, youth services are handled by the youth services division in the Department of Employment office at 1407 S.W. 4th Avenue, in Portland and by youth representatives in each of the other 25 areas served by the Department of Employment.
