CARD OF THANKS

I want to say a great big and sincere thank you to all the wonderful people of Vernonia who sent me cards, and gifts, and called on me while I was in the hospital. It helps a lot to have the good wishes of friends when one is down. Again, thank you to all of you.

SOIL fumigation injector equipment. Tests are underway at the North Willamette Station to find a low-vil-atil fumigant that will control nematodes and symphans, yet will not harm growing plants nor leave residues.

Strawberry plants in these two photos were taken from the same field, but soil for plants at left was not fumigated while soil for plants at right was fumigated.

Increased Yield Possible from Control of Pests by Fumigation

Soil fumigation may be the next new practice that will boost small fruit yields in Western Oregon, says Columbia county extension agent Tom Zinn.

"Such yield increases, if they occur, could conceivably add an estimated 12 to 14 million dollars to our annual income from strawberries and red raspberries", states Zinn. These are the primary small fruit crops on which fumigants have been tested.

What is soil fumigation? Soil fumigation consists of adding certain volatile chemicals to soil for pest control. Many different kinds of soil pests are called nematodes. Which brings about another question, what are nematodes? They are classified as microscopic thread or round worm being parasitic in nature.

Once these nematodes are introduced they spread locally by cultivation, irrigation, floods, soil erosion, or any other action that disturbs soil and moves it from place to place.

More than 140 species of nematodes are known to attack various plants and at least 40 of these are considered major crop pests.

The objective of fumigation as it applies to nematode control, is to place chemicals in the soil where they can effectively volatilize into a gas which will spread through spaces between soil particles and kill the nematodes.

Research conducted by R. M. Bullock, Oregon State University Experiment Station at Aurora, indicates that in some cases fumigation has doubled strawberry yields. Fumigation also reduced the present replacement of strawberry plants and increased the length and number of red raspberry canes per hill while reducing nematode counts.

"These positive results must be balanced with results in which fumigants have had no effect," Bullock says. In some cases there has been an increase in plant vigor, but there has not always been a corresponding increase in yields.

Sometimes, fumigation of the same soil in two fields has shown good yield responses in one field but no response in the other.

Experimental fumigated plots of strawberries at the North Willamette station are producing more than eight tons per acre while adjacent non-fumigated plots are producing only four tons per acre. In other cases, fumigation has shown no advantage.

Interest in soil fumigation by several local growers in Columbia county will bring commercial applicators to the county this fall for fumigation work. "This will provide an opportunity for field evaluation of the practice while research continues", says Zinn.

BOB'S UNION SERVICE

In Oregon... after a swim, beer is a natural

On a hot summer day, a dip in a cool stream can be wonderfully refreshing. Equally refreshing when you're relaxing afterwards with friends is a hearty glass of beer. There's hardly another beverage around that suits what you do for fun as much as beer.
Camping, hiking, or just lounging on a lawn chair—beer brings to each just the right touch of extra good living.

Your familiar glass of beer is also a pleasurable reminder that we live in a land of personal freedom—and that our right to enjoy beer and ale, if we so desire, is just one, but an important one, of those personal freedoms.

In Oregon...beer goes with fun, with relaxation
