Prevention of Mouse Damage Method Given

Tall, heavy stands of alfalfa are an open invitation to winter mouse damage warns Don Coin Walrod, county extension agent. Cutting at this late date won't damage the alfalfa, providing fields are not too wet to get in with equipment, and it will help to eliminate protective cover for the mice.

Alfalfa growers should watch for signs of meadow mouse damage and start treatment immediately when damage becomes evident, says Walrod. Meadow mice can be controlled with one percent zinc phosphide treated wheat. Three to five lbs. of bait per acre will ordinarily allow six to twelve kernels to be placed in each mouse runway.

CARE to Help Flood Victims

The overseas relief agency, CARE, has authorized its mission in South Vietnam to provide 5,000 blankets and $5,000 for other emergency aid to victims of floods reported to be the country's worst in two decades, it is learned by the regional CARE office in Seattle.

This initial assistance will amount to more than $20,000 in value. It will be followed by long-range relief and reconstruction after CARE representatives have been able to check needs on the disaster scene, where thousands are dead or homeless.

Donations for the victims may be sent to Vietnam Flood Relief, CARE, Frederick & Nelson, Seattle, or to local CARE outlets.

Salmon Catch Climbs Higher

The 1964 salmon catch at the mouth of the Columbia River and adjacent offshore waters continued its upward climb which began in 1961, although individual sport fishing effort dropped about 4,000 fisherman over the 1963 figure. This is borne out by final records of the sport catch and fishing effort compiled jointly by the Oregon game commission and the Washington Department of Fisheries.

Final tabulations show a total of 162,000 salmon taken by sport anglers during the 1964 season, an increase of about 14,000 fish over 1963. The number of anglers decreased slightly from the 117,800 last year to 113,100 this year. The increased catch was made in spite of poor weather conditions in offshore areas for considerable portions of the season. Considerable bad weather probably influenced the drop in angling pressure.

Catch records show 28,000 chinook taken by anglers, a drop of more than 4,600 chinook over the 1963 figure. This was the lowest catch of chinook salmon recorded for several years.

Silver salmon numbered 134,000, an increase of about 17,000 over the silver catch of last year. The total catch, however, was one of the highest recorded in the 19-year tally of the lower Columbia sport catch by the two agencies.

The sport fishery at the mouth of the Columbia and offshore waters began in early June and terminated in late September, with the peak of fishing from August through mid-September. Peak of the chinook fishery occurred during August 15 through the Labor Day weekend when around 18,000 were tallied. Silver salmon anglers found the best results during a like period, but beginning about a week later on August 22 and extending another week into mid-September. About 80,000 silver were taken during this short period.

In addition to chinook and silver salmon recorded by anglers, a host of other species was taken at the mouth of the Columbia. Most prevalent in the catch included good numbers of rockfish, flounder, a few lingcod and halibut. Other fish included shark, perch, hake and blackcod. The total take of miscellaneous species was around 18,900. A few steelhead and cutthroat trout were reported.

Youth Banquet Draws Crowd

There were 99 tickets sold for the Community Youth Rally held last Saturday evening at the EUB church social hall. The excellent chicken dinner, prepared by Friar Tuck of Beaverton, was greatly enjoyed by the good representation from this area and the youth group from Manning which joined them.

Jerry Johnson from radio station KPDQ gave an inspiring message and he brought with him an outstanding Christian singer, Ray Kaady who sang four solos, and another man who accompanied the soloist on the piano.

The event was considered a success in every way and was much enjoyed by all who attended.
