AROUND THE FARM

By Don Coin Walrod

Electronic record keeping services are now becoming available to farmers as a means of providing accurate and readily available information about the farm business. Most of the time adequate cost data is not available in time for the operator to make constructive decisions about management, but the electronic processing of records can improve this situation considerably.

Currently a pilot program is underway at Washington State University wherein the Western Electronic Farm Accounting Project is engaged in providing computer service to a limited number of farm operators.

Now the University of Arizona is offering electronic processing of records for farmers on a direct fee basis. The Arizona system requires that the farmer code his own entries. This means a little more work for the farmer, but once the code is learned it may be more efficient than standard procedures.

Farmers participating in 1965 will pay 14 cents per entry. The total money cost may be estimated by the participant by multiplying the average number of checks written per month by 1.3 and then multiplying this times 14 cents.

The Arizona program provides a running summary of costs and revenue by enterprise and a year-end summary statement including net worth. There is no enterprise or farm business analysis.

Farmers interested in participating in such a program should make arrangements right away so that their records will start with the first of the year.

Most farmers know something about the soil on their farms. They know the depth of the soil, whether it's light, sandy and porous or heavy, tight, and sticky. From experience gained over a period of years they know which crops do best on certain fields and which spots fail to produce satisfactorily. They frequently do not, however, know about all the other factors which affect maximum crop production.

Among the many factors that need to be considered are the amount of organic matter, the amount of available plant food nutrients present in the soils such as phosphorus, potassium, calcium, magnesium, and numerous minor elements. These factors are highly variable from place to place and between soil types.

Much of this knowledge know-how, or experience has been gained by a trial and error method. This is good, but this method of crop production and soil treatment can be more expensive than need be—and frequently the results are slow or uncertain.

One of the best ways to gain a better knowledge of your soil and its needs is to have the soil tested. Naturally, the results of a soil test are no better than the sample. It is important that samples be representative of the particular field involved, and if dried, that artificial heat not be used in doing so.

Other particulars of taking soil samples may vary with the situation, but full details, including the necessary cartons and information cards, can be secured from county Extension offices.

Signing of the Food Stamp Act by the President in August has some far-reaching implications for many people whether they are producers of agricultural commodities, recipients of the food stamps, or the general public. This makes permanent a pilot program under trial in urban and rural areas of 22 states and provides for gradual expansion in the next three years to the counties and communities requesting it.

The food stamp program provides individual food subsidies to needy families according to degree of need, with all the foods purchased at regular retail stores. Under the provisions of the act, all food or food products for human consumption may be purchased with federal food coupons except alcoholic beverages, tobacco, foods which are identified on the package as imported, and meat and meat products which are imported.

Thus rather than moving a limited and specific group of "surplus" foods, the modern food stamp plan is intended to generally increase the consumption of a range of commodities. Research made during the trial indicates that food coupon users largely selected the items that not only provided better nutrition but also require a maximum of America's farm resources to produce.

For agricultural marketers, the fact that the food stamp recipients purchase foods of their choice at regular retail outlets is a key element of the program. And while the expense of this program will be charged to the U. S. department of agriculture, certainly such costs are for total public benefit rather than the reduction of agricultural abundances.

CARC to Meet Next Tuesday

The Columbia Association for Retarded Children will meet at the chamber of commerce building in St. Helens Tuesday, December 15, at 8:00 p.m.

There will be no speaker at this meeting as there is a wide area of business to be discussed.

Christmas gifts for the patients at Fairview home will be taken to Salem on December 20, Mrs. Robert Robinson, president of the organization said, or may be mailed. The home would welcome a variety of items that would help make a warm and joyous holiday for the handicapped such as airplanes, comic books, harmonicas, hoops, jump ropes, etc., records, costume jewelry, cosmetics, hairbrushes and clothing.

If the gifts are wrapped, a note should be attached indicating whether the gift is suitable for an adult or child, and whether it is for a male or female. Christmas gift wrapping can also be sent for children who enjoy helping wrap gifts.

These items may be left with Mrs. Floyd Leever, 115 White Way, St. Helens (phone 397-1860), or Mrs. Robert Robinson, Scappoose, or may be turned in at the meeting Tuesday.

The Traffic Safety Division of the Oregon Department of Motor Vehicles reports: Following too closely is the most frequent cause of accidents. On slippery pavement allow three car lengths between you and the car ahead.
