GOLF VIEWS and NEWS

After leaving the Burbank, DeBell Municipal golf course which has such a beautiful setting, looking over the city of Burbank and Hollywood Hills, we headed for Death Valley and we hoped a little warmer weather.

Leaving the northeast Los Angeles area, we saw a sign, "Knollwood Golf Course" and as it was only about 11 a.m. we decided to investigate. We found that it was a development golf course built in several small valleys with houses and lots around its perimeter.

It was well laid out from a standpoint of one foursome interfering with another foursome's golf game. In fact, it would take a search warrant to find anyone on the course.

As I said, it was laid out in valleys. Sometimes one would play 3 or 4 holes in one valley then wind up over a small hill in between the homes, and down the other side to the next tee.

This made it very nice for a leisurely game of golf and a view of quite a lot of scenery, but one had better rent a golf cart, either electric or gas, to ride around with or he would really get walking exercise.

Between some tees we would travel 2 to 3 hundred yards before teeing for the next shot. Some of the tees were located at the top of these valleys which gave a very fine shot out into the bottom of the valley and the distance one would get on a drive was certainly very good for a golfer's ego and this includes the lady golfers.

Apparently they had a very active and large mens' and ladies' club going at this course, as we noticed that all of the signs around the course, even to replacing divots and fixing ball mark signs, were put up by these groups.

The course itself was quite clean with very little debris scattered around the tees or fairways. This was also true around the club house and pro shop. This reminded us of our own course at home, as our golfers have done an excellent job of putting papers and debris in the trash cans provided. This was brought out in our recent high water here at the course as there was hardly any debris of any kind found on the course after this high water.

After having a sandwich and cup of coffee in the coffee shop and talking to the caretakers, we took off through Lancaster and Mohave to Barstow where we visited our next golf club.

Golfing is beginning to take hold here at our course once more, after all of the snow that has kept golfers away for almost two months. Several players were here from Longview and St. Helens as well as some of our regular golfers from Forest Grove, Hillsboro and Portland, over the week end.

Some of these were strangers to this valley and it is especially nice to see these people and hear their comments on this beautiful spot and how much they enjoyed the day.

In my last Golf News, I told about some of the animals (wild) we saw in California. Well, last Thursday I took my brother (who was here on a visit) for a drive around the community and we saw two large bobcats out in a field hunting for mice about 10:30 in the morning. That gave both of us quite a thrill.

Paid up green fee memberships are now open and we hope to see more new golfers on your course each week.
