Sheep Flock Care Needed

The most critical time for pregnant ewes, nutritionally speaking, is during the last four to six weeks before the lamb is born. Flock owners should be giving extra attention to the ration of such animals, suggests County Extension Agent Don Coin Walrod.

The last 30 days of the gestation period is the most important from the standpoint of the ration of the ewe since a third of the growth in weight of the fetus takes place during this time. Because feed capacity of the pregnant ewe is restricted due to the unborn lamb, fluids and tissue present in the abdominal cavity, a more concentrated ration needs to be fed, says Walrod.

Failure to provide an adequate level of concentrates in the ration during this period may lead to ewe paralysis, frequently called pregnancy disease.

During the last four to six weeks prior to lambing, it is essential that the ewe be given some concentrated feed rather than depending upon hay or grass which may be of poor quality to supply all of her nutrients. Three-quarters to one pound of grain, or two pounds of molasses will generally boost the nutrient level adequately as far as energy is concerned. However, if no legume hay is available, it might be advisable to feed a small amount of protein supplement, such as Austrian peas or cotton-seed or similar protein supplement.

A mineral mixture of iodized salt and steamed bone meal normally will take care of the mineral requirements, indicates Walrod. The calcium and phosphorus contained in such a mix are important factors in the development of the lamb fetus. Dicalcium phosphate may replace the steamed bone meal which is becoming difficult to obtain.

Freezing Eases Lunch Making

Preparing sandwiches for lunches that are carried from home to school and on the job can be a real chore. It can be made easier by preparing a large quantity of sandwiches at one time, then freezing them, says Margaret Allyn, Columbia county Extension Agent.

Wrapped in a double thickness of heavy waxed paper, sandwiches can be stored a week in a freezer without loss of quality. If you use a moisture-vapor-resistant wrap, you can extend this period to two weeks.

Some fillings that freeze well are luncheon meats, leftover sliced or chopped roast beef, roast pork, baked ham, chicken, turkey, dried beef, well drained tuna or salmon, sliced cheese, cheese spreads, hard cooked egg yolks and peanut butter.

These can be used separately or combined with cream cheese, milk, dairy sour cream, applesauce, creamed butter, or lemon, orange or pineapple juice to make spreading easy. Add sliced or chopped olives and pickles, if desired. Spread the bread with softened (not melted) butter to keep filling from soaking into the bread.

Do not put in any raw vegetables such as lettuce, celery, or tomatoes, reminds Margaret Allyn. They lose crispness, color and flavors when frozen. Also the whites of hard-cooked eggs become tough, and jellies or very moist fillings such as egg salad or tuna salad soak into the bread.

Wrap sandwiches separately and freeze at 0°F. or below.

Frozen sandwiches can go directly into the lunch pail. By noon, they will be completely thawed.

Once thawed, however, they should be eaten at once.

To the average guy most of the teachers in the school of experience are very attractive.
