Tell Neighbor Crusade Theme

"Tell Your Neighbor" is a major theme of the American Cancer Society's 1966 Crusade in April, Cancer control month.

Mrs. Bill Horn, chairman, of the Society's Crusade in Vernonia said: "It is my hope that all our volunteers will be communicators of hope rather than salesmen of fear. It is hope, not fear, that makes people take personal action against cancer."

She said that getting people to take personal action against cancer is one of the most difficult things in the world. People put off having an annual health checkup or don't even have one. They avoid taking prompt action when a cancer danger signal appears. They delay until it is too late for effective treatment.

It is even harder than getting people out to vote, she continued, and politicians and candidates know how hard this is, and how hard they have to work for it.

The purpose of the annual crusade of the society, the chairman said, is not just to raise money to advance cancer control—for cancer research, education and service. It is to help save thousands of additional lives now.

"Tell Your Neighbor" volunteers going from house-to-house during the crusade will be, in fact, people speaking to people about cancer and what they can do about it. The volunteer will leave life-saving literature that answers questions about cancer which concerns everyone.
