QUESTION: I recently read a newspaper reminder about notifying social security of any change in my address. I'm 32 and I'll be changing jobs and moving to another state in a few months. Do I need to tell social security my new address after I move?

ANSWER: No. The newspaper reminder you read was meant for people who are getting monthly social security checks and move. Until you start getting social security payments, it's not necessary to keep social security notified of your latest address.

QUESTION: I'm a 61-year-old widow. Since I had only been married for 2 months when my husband died in an airplane crash in 1971, I couldn't get monthly social security benefits. Now I hear the law requiring that the marriage had lasted at least 3 months has been changed? Is this true?

ANSWER: Yes. If the worker's death was accidental or occurred while he was on duty in the armed forces, there is no requirement about the length of the marriage. You should re-apply for widow's benefits at your local social security office.

QUESTION: When I signed up for medical insurance under Medicare, I couldn't get hospital insurance because I hadn't worked long enough under social security. However, my sister told me that this has recently been changed. How do I apply for hospital insurance coverage?

ANSWER: Call, write, or visit any social security office to apply. Persons, like yourself, who previously couldn't get hospital insurance coverage may now enroll at a cost of $33 per month. The enrollment period for 1973 extends through August. If you do not enroll by August 31, 1973 you will not be able to enroll until the next general enrollment period—the first three months of 1974.

QUESTION: My husband retired last year and he, our 11-year-old daughter, and I receive social security benefits on his work record. Will my earnings from my new teaching position affect their benefits?

ANSWER: No, your earnings will only affect your benefit. Your earnings will have no effect on the other members of your family.

QUESTION: My brother was only 25 when he died last month. He left a 21-year-old widow and two children, a 2-year-old and a baby 5 months old. Even though my brother was very young, couldn't he still have enough work under social security for his wife and children to get monthly checks?

ANSWER: Yes, if your brother had as little as 1 1/2 years of work under social security, his wife and children could get monthly social security survivors checks and a lump-sum payment to help with the funeral expenses. Your sister-in-law should call, write, or visit any social security office as soon as possible to apply for benefits.

QUESTION: I have received social security checks regularly on the 3rd of the month for years. Then suddenly my check doesn't come this month. When I phoned the social security office, they asked me all sorts of questions. Why ask me? They are the ones who are supposed to have the answers.

ANSWER: There could be any number of reasons why you didn't receive your check and the social security office might be able to give you the reason immediately from your answers to their questions. For instance, a recent change of address may delay your check. Or, if you moved some time ago but didn't change your address with social security, the Post Office may have stopped forwarding your mail. High earnings from work could be holding back the check to recover an overpayment. A change of eligibility of someone else getting benefits on the same account could delay a check. Sometimes, a person even forgets he had received and cashed his check. There are many possible reasons for delay of a check.

QUESTION: What is the effective date for health insurance coverage under Medicare for disabled beneficiaries?

ANSWER: Health insurance coverage begins no earlier than July 1, 1973 for those who qualify. To qualify the person must have been entitled to cash disability benefits for 24 consecutive calendar months.

QUESTION: I am a widower and am not insured on my own record. At what age can I receive social security benefits on my wife's record?

ANSWER: Provided you were dependent on your wife for one-half your support when she died, you may start receiving social security benefits as a widower as early as age 60. This change in the law is effective with January of 1973.
