County Takes Second At Fair

The Columbia County Exhibits won second place at the state fair. Natal Grange put in the display as they won first place in the county fair last year.

The theme this year at the state fair is "East meets West. The Columbia County exhibit used the foreign exchange students as their link between east and west

The background was a collage of east-west pictures with a map of the east on one side and the west on the other. In front was blue crushed velvet representing the ocean with sand and moss for the continents. In the ocean was three blocks, the foreground block was a dark skinned doll with Talk Together on the front, the second was a light skinned doll with Walk Together. The background doll represented Betsy Ross with an American flag. A log divided the background and the water on it was streamers. On the left side of the collage was a sign which had Columbia County on it, on the right was the sign with the story of the exchange students.

Those who went down to Salem on Thursday to set up the display were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Anderegg, Lawton Waddell, Ruth Steers, Ronda and Tammy Smith and Nancy Reynolds.

Modern Phone Convenience Now 'Accepted Way Of Life'

a telephone line fifty years ago, the phone was the most modern in most areas, with a central operator handling all incoming and outgoing calls, even between neighbors.

Today, through the miracle of electronics, a phone call is no longer an event but an accepted way of life with calls made cross country as a matter of course. So spoiled is modern man by the convenience of picking up a receiver that trouble on the line causes irritation and comments about the service.

'The minute we have any idea there's something wrong usually when a customer calls in we try to get to the problem as soon as possible," said Greg Port, local station operator.

"Of course," he continued, 'we can't always get there within a prescribed time limit because of lack of personnel but we try to give the very best possible service at all times.

Greg, who handles the service calls for both the Vernonia and Timber area, is also responsible for the local station which houses multitude of equipment including a battery system which enables the phone system to continue even when electric service is curtailed.

"If you remember," Greg said, "las winter when the electricity went out because of the bad ice conditions the phones continued to be in service. Even in a disaster, service is seldom restricted for more than 48 hours; generally less.'

Each morning the long distance lines are checked first to make sure they are functioning properly; then local lines get a scrutiny. Those that show they aren't functioning properly are handled as soon as humanly possible.

The station operator also keeps an eye out for those who neglect to hang up their phone or who may leave it off the hook to keep from being disturbed by incoming calls.

"A light comes on." said John Brunson - equipment man from Forest Grove who has been checking over the local station and bringing it up to standard . 'When someone forgets to put the phone receiver back on the hook. When that happens," he continued, "we wait a few minutes then switch the phone off. If the phone continues to turn on a "honker" which keeps up a continuous noise until the subscriber hangs the phone back on the hook. Although Vernonia suffers from a lack of pay phones, improvements are coming in that area also, according to personnel. Then - barring vandalism, one of the company's number one problems, in all areas, placing a telephone call, even if not a subscriber, will be only a short walk to the convenience of talking anywhere in
