Senator William H. Holmstrom, (D) Gearhart, Senate Majority Leader said September 20 that the published reports indicating Governor McCall may call a special mini-session in October to deal with the energy problems is not warranted based on the facts available.

The public should be made aware of the position of the majority of the members of the Senate Democratic caucus who were polled during the past two days. The overwhelming response against the proposed mini-session was based on several points.

Of the 15 members of the Senate Democrats polled, thirteen were against having a mini-session because there is no apparent immediate danger which could not wait until the early January session already projected by McCall. Further objections aired by the members was the law which states that bills vetoed at the last session by the Governor must be resolved during the special session. Also the appointments made by Governor McCall must also be considered at this proposed session. This could prolong the session by a considerable time and the mini-session would become a costly and time consuming one.

The voluntary curtailment called for by Governor McCall is apparently working and indeed there will not be an energy crisis between now and the session the Governor will call in January.

Majority Oppose Special Session Says Holmstrom

available to us at the present time, we see no reason why we should grant the Governor the extraordinary power he is asking until the time it becomes certain that a crisis does exist.

At the present time, there is no way to preclude the possibility that if the power crisis situation should dramatically change in the next three months, I am confident the Democratic Majority in the Senate would cooperate with the Governor's office to solve the problem.

The Democratic controlled legislature during the past session foresaw very early this year the possibilities of a power crisis and passed legislation to authorize the public utilities commissioner to allocate power when necessary. This law goes into effect January 1, 1974.
