Starvation Is Real Reason

For Extinction Are hunters an endangered species? If you have followed the latest Friends of Animals group you would feel threatened. If you would take a poll of farmers that will let you hunt on their lands, you would feel threatened. Count the number of hunters afield, it will scare you!

The anti-hunting groups feel that hunters are putting species on the endangered list. Farmers are posting their land because so-called sportsmen shoot cows or tear down fences. Then add ing to the problem are the hunters themselves, who are over-populating the hunting grounds

Within this free country live people who are bent on denying others the right to pursue the tradition of their forefathers, because they feel that shooting animals is inhumane and destine to wipe out the animals. But as many of us see it, these people are the ones who are destined to destroy animals through starvation by overgrazing. One such classic example was the Kaibab deer herd in North Arizona. Unhunted, and with natural predators wiped out, the herd grew to more than 100,000. Then the food ran out, and 70,000 deer starved in six years. The antihunting protectionists fail to realize that wildlife cannot be stockpiled and that if hunters do not harvest the surplus, natural factors will.

Now we hear someone in the crowd crying so what if a few animals die off; the animals will make a comeback. Something most people forget is that when a large quantity of animals are starving to death, that they will eat almost anything and they strip every piece of food from the ground and in doing so they destroy the habitat severly. The habitat will take many years to grow back and in the meantime the animals will starve.

Anti-hunting protectionist believe that the hunter is responsible for putting animals on the endangered list. But a spokes-man for the U.S. Department of Interior agrees with sportsmen in saying: "Most endangered species are victims of habitat alteration and environmental pollution. Sport hunting poses absolutely no threat to the survival of a species; in fact, sportsmen are often the sole defenders of wildlife."

Remember in 1968 when all the elk hunters fed the elk? Hunting organizations donated money for hay, and individuals donated hay. These people helped save

Two Class Meetings Held During Activity

Meetings were held during activity on November 27, for the Senior and Sophomore classes. Mark Hopkins, president of the

The seniors also nominated a graduation committee, and they will be elected at the next meeting.

cuss money-making ideas, and the class then voted on checking into them.

Their class adviser, Chris Boyle, announced that the class' executive committee would be meeting on December 4 with a representative from Master Engravers, to discuss class ring choices.

our eik from starving not just because they enjoy shooting them, but that they hated to see any animal starve to death. People like this are your true sportsmen, not you game hog or poacher who could care less for anything else but himself. It is these people - the poacher, the game hog, and the city slicker who stop at nothing that are giving the sportsmen a bad name. They tear down fences, gates, signs and even buildings, and when they do it on a farmers land, the farmer just posts his land.

Another problem is the ever increasing hunter population that is steadily outgrowing the amount of land.

How much are anti-hunting groups contributing to the preservation of wildlife? Are they coming anywhere near the sportsmen? In 1971 hunting and fishing licenses and permits yielded nearly $200-million dollars in revenue in the U.S. Excise taxes on arms, ammunition and tackle produced an additional $48-million dollars; all going to the management and protection of our National Wild-

Society Aids In Community

The Vernonia Dorcas Welfare Society of the Seventh-day Ad-ventist church will observe the centennial of Seventh-day Ad ventist Community Services in 1974. Mrs. Claude Veal, director of the Vernonia Adventist Dorcas Society, announced the centennial observance this week She pointed out that the local society had 10,794 sister societies in 193 countries. In addition, she said, 1,373 Adventist men's organizations are involved in community service programs.

A special program will be held in observance of the centennial on Saturday, May 4. There will also be a state-wide Centennial Community Services Federation meeting scheduled. The date for this has not yet been announced, Mrs. Veal said.

The local society has five members giving 2 hours of service to the community each week with food boxes, clothing, boxes of necessities for burned out families, shipments of materials for the overseas depots, etc. This year they have helped 20 families in the Vernonia area alone

"We do not limit membership to our society to Adventists," said Mrs. Veal. "We are happy to have others in the community join us in this work of community service. Our Dorcas Society meets each Monday, 7 p.m. at 1218 Birch Street.
