Oregon State Officials Find Citizens Apprehensive About Regional Planning

Oregon State officials toured Columbia County last Tuesday, July 30, held a number of press briefings with local county newspapers and held an open meeting Tuesday evening which was billed as a conference with state administrators, county officials and the city mayors and councilmen

Present for the afternoon sessions with newspapers were Kess Cannon, Director of the State Department of Environmental Quality: Laverne Miller, Chief of Sanitary Services for the State Health Department and Robert K. Logan, Administrator of the Local Government Relations Division of the State Executive Department.

Due to illness and other commitments only Robert Logan and Laverne Miller were present for the evening meeting.

The evening meeting, which was attended by officials of the county and officials from three of the five cities of the county and about 25 citizens began with opening remarks by Logan in which he noted that the purpose of the conference was to answer questions regarding the role of the state and the role of the county

Logan then discussed the rea sons for the establishment of state administrative districts. councils of government and regional councils of government. He cited the fact that there are 200 state agencies, boards and commissions and that these often overlap and duplicate efforts and the governor established 14 administrative districts to deliver the services more efficiently. Regarding regional planning Logan stated that the purpose of the councils of government is to strengthen local governments; to help local governments to work together on common problems. He noted the fact that there are 24 federal programs that require regional planning. They include programs in water. highways, sewer districts, aging etc. The governors purpose he said, is to create an umbrella organization to aid planning. At this point the meeting was opened to questions from officials and citizens present.

One citizen raised the ques tion, "Why do we have to be in CRAG?" Logan's response was that a city of county does not have to have a CCOG or a CRAG. Another citizen asked, "By what authority did the governor set up the administrative districts??" Logan's response was that this is a management function and that many of the departments already had districts and they have been in existence now for 71/2 years.

A citizen asked how many states have administrative districts? Logan's response was that 44 elected officials have to approve the project before it can be done.

In response to a question concerning the splitting of the county and placing half of the county in one administrative district and half in another, Logan noted that Columbia County is not an easy geographic area to deal with and that the governors office has been reluctant to split any county. "We are looking for something workable and reasonable," he said. A citizen asked what was the purpose of the administrative districts. Logan responded that state agencies have to know where to send services and the districts give the state one constant base for the gathering of data needed.

A citizen questioned the need for efficiency and said, "Dictatorships handle things much more efficiently than do democracies." Logan responded that he did not think this to be so. A citizen asked, "Where does Columbia County sit as far as federal funding?" Mr. Frank Corsiglia, who is on the St Helens City Council and is a representative of that body to CRAG. stated that when you don't have a member you don't have anyone there to plead your case.

Regarding a question cerning domination by Portland, Corsiglia stated, "I didn't see any indication in four years that Portland was trying to dominate.

A citizen then asked, "Does every region have a CRAG? Logan responded that 33 of 37 counties in Oregon belong to some regional planning organization, and that 140 of the 240 cities of Oregon are members of CRAG.

A citizen questioned Logan concerning the financing of CRAG. Logan responded that CRAG's are financed on a per capita assessment of the members of the association of governments. The Columbia Region assesses members 37 cents per capita. He noted, however, that the per capita assessment does not pay the total CRAG budget but that most of the money comes from state and federal funds

A citizen asked if per capita taxation was not illegal and cited the example of Mrs. Kangas who, she said, receives a rebate from the state government. Representative Dick Magruder who was present at the meeting stated that Mrs. Kangas was way off base in that statement. Logan commented that the CRAG assessment was not a capitation tax and was similar to dues paid by nearly every city to the local Chamber of Commerce.

A citizen then asked if some federal programs require a CCOG. Logan responded that ment is made up of just as many sincere folks as you are and there has to be reasonableness on both sides.

A citizen then inquired concerning the possibility of a vote on CRAG membership. His response to this was that a vote wa taken in 1971 by the entire state which approved planning.

Another citizen asked con cerning the status of current programs. Logan responded that certain federal programs demand regional planning. Some of these are in the areas of aging, highways, and manpower.

In response to another ques tion concerning the purpose of administrative districts, Logan noted that over 500 different programs have to be delivered and administrative districts aid the delivery of the programs.

A citizen commented to the effect that Logan was here as a bureaucrat and the only solution offered were adding more to the bureacracy. Logan responded that there are two ways to handle the problems: 1) to close your eyes to the problem and pretend it doesn't exist, or 2) to try to deal with the problem.

A citizen asked, "With our checks and balance system how are they going to enforce it? Logan asked for clarification of the question and another citizen gave an example of building a garage and asked, "how can they keep me from building a Logan replied, with garage the police.

citizen asked regarding A flexibility of the rules within the regions. The response from state officials was that they will be flexible from county to county and within each county

One citizen said at this point, 'This is what scares me on regionalism, the lack of flexibility

At this point Magruder asked what the governor's position would be if a proposal was brought up in the next legislature concerning referral of the CRAG question to the people? Logan responded that this would be no problem.

At this point a citizen asked where the new Unites States Police Cars come from? Logan stated he did not know of the existence of any such police force

A citizen commented that "we have county and state and the whole business can operate without another layer of government to oppress us." Logan responded simply that membership in CRAG is not essential.

sub-state districts

'Why has the governor's office persisted in wanting us to join CRAG?" another citizen asked. Logan's response was that Columbia County does not have to belong to CRAG.

The same citizen then alluded to CRAG literature and asked 'Why do all the books say we are numbers?" To which Logan replied that he did not care what the books say. They are wrong. He then went on to say that to participate in certain federal programs the local government must belong to a regional plan-ning organization. He cited the Fanno Creek and the Tigard-Metzger sewer projects as reas-ons for the need for planning. A citizen made a comment concerning a Preliminary Housing Plan for the CRAG region to which Logan responded by saying that there are certain broad national problems that do not stay within boundaries.

Coming back to the reasons for CRAG and CCOG Logan noted that what the state and federal agencies are trying to do is to see that the money given them is used wisely.

He then cited the Trident facility as an example of the way regional government is putting the control back into the hands of local government. He stated that local people, local government some such as Highway require planning A citizen asked, "Did we have to be in any district?" and then made a statement addressed to Logan, "You are advocating that we are in districts." Logan's response was that the governor does have the legal authority to establish districts and cited Attorney General Johnson's opinion to that effect.

Following questions by Stan Pintarich and Rod Norwood concerning administrative districts Mayor Kinzig commented that Scappoose has joined CRAG and that no citizen of Scappoose had been to the Council to complain. This was followed by a comment from a resident of the Cedar Lane trailer court (which is outside the city) that he was a citizen and complaining. The citizen followed up by saying. "I am complaining-If you aren't representing Scappoose any better than you are then Scappoose should find a new mayor. Logan noted that there are certain advantages to belonging to CRAG and that many of the problems are not contained within boundaries

Frank Corsiglia, St. Helens, responded to a question from a citizen regarding the feeling of CRAG on city memberships. He said, "They are very happy to have city membership. Logan then stated, "Govern-
