Oregon Apples in Africa

So attractive have been the reports of the superior quality of Oregon apples, says a Portland special, that a party of pilgrims came all the way from Johannesburg, South Africa, to Portland in order to see for themselves whether or not Oregon fruit was so much better than that from other parts of the world. They came, they saw, and they—left orders to the extent of 25 carloads of the finest apples Oregon could produce.

This purchase is merely the entering wedge. In the past the bulk of apples for the South African trade have been purchased in Nova Scotia and other Eastern sections, but acquaintance with the wonderful coloring, quality and long-keeping characteristics of Oregon apples will undoubtedly result in diverting practically all future orders to the Pacific Northwest, a movement which will be greatly stimulated when the Panama canal is in operation.

Sweet Clover.

Where alfalfa and red clover will not grow sweet clover is not a bad substitute, say Valley Farmer growers of the crop. It is one of the most drought resistant of the clovers, grows on most any kind of soil, doesn't seem to be injured by alkali and is an excellent crop for hillsides, where washing has laid the subsoil bare. Sweet clover makes the earliest pasturage in the spring and all stock will eat it and keep it closely cropped if turned on to it early in the season. This is an excellent way of teaching stock to like the forage. An acre of sweet clover pasture will support more hogs than an acre of alfalfa under the same conditions, says Marle Woodson of Oklahoma. Stock not accustomed to the hay sometimes refuse to eat it. This can be overcome by sprinkling the ration for a few mornings with damp salt or brine.

Sweet clover makes a good green manuring crop and is excellent for inoculating soil for the growing of alfalfa, as the same bacteria live on the roots of both. When sweet clover is sown on poor land to improve it the seed is sown in the spring at the rate of 15 pounds to the acre and harrowed in.

BRYAN UPHOLDS CURRENCY BILL

Thinks Government Should Control the Banks in the Interest of the People.

Waterloo, Iowa. — Secretary of State William J. Bryan Friday night defended the currency bill, the new tariff and the income tax.

"For generations the national banks have held the government's money in return for contributions to campaigns and support of the Republican party," said Mr. Bryan. "The currency bill gives the bankers enough to make them happy and doesn't enable them to take enough to make the people miserable."

"There is one feature about this bill that should win the support of every banker doing legitimate banking business. Heretofore it has been necessary to put up bonds to secure government money, but by the provisions of the new bill the government loans money without requiring bonds."

"The government asks in return something that every banker should be willing to concede, namely, that the government should issue the money itself. Why let the banks issue the money in time of peace when the government must issue it in time of trouble?"

"I also believe the banks can very well concede this point when they consider the benefits they receive through not having to purchase bonds as security and they will have to concede this point whether they want to or not."

Of the federal reserve board plan he said:

"What do you regulate the banks for? For their own benefit? No, for the benefit of the people who do business with them. Whose money have the banks? Why, the people's money. Whose money do they get from the government? The people's. Then who says that the banks shall control themselves while they handle the people's money and regulate themselves and make themselves do what people want done. You trust everything else to a political body; who, then, says that a political body cannot control the banks for the people?"

Secretary Bryan said Nelson Aldrich's opposition to the currency bill was necessary to secure the passage of the bill.

"Mr. Aldrich has done more than any other man in public life to make the Republican party a third party in this country," said the speaker.

"We had a meeting in Boston the other day and the papers said that when the question was asked as to whether they would be controlled by a board of bankers they all shouted, 'We think the banks ought to be controlled by bankers.'"

"What would you think of a railroad that said, 'We must control the interstate commerce commission that controls us in the railroad business?'"

"The way some bankers talk you would imagine that business communities exist for the benefit of the bank. It would be just as absurd to say that people ate in order to furnish a demand for farmers' products. This bill means that the banks are to fulfill the principles of their existence, and are to live for the accommodation of business and not for control."

"Mr. Aldrich complained the other day that he did not like this bill. That is the reason it was written this way, so he would not like it."

Speaking on the tariff, Mr. Bryan said President Wilson cast his lot with the plain people and insisted on low rates on the necessities.
