UD STORAGE IS THE TOPIC of Pits, Masonry Houses and gouts for Holding Main rop Discussed by Federal ureau.

storage of potatoes of the main can be accomplished most satiserly throughout much of the ed States in the dugout pit or po-cellar in some of its various forms construction, says a recently pub-farmers' bulletin of the United s department of agriculture, to Storage and Storage Houses. general, the bulletin says, no at-is made to store potatoes of the crop, since usually they are sold mediate consumption.

the dugout storage house is in general use, concrete or masonry with frame superstructures are, most satisfactory in cold clis. In some sections, especially in outh where drainage is poor, in-frame structures built entirely ground must be depended upon. primary purposes of storage, it ted out, are to protect the tubers extremes of heat and cold and light. Account also must be of conditions of humidity and ation and of the size of the storle.

temperature should be the high-which potatoes can be maintain-and ungerminated and which the same time hold fungous dis-in check. Experiments of the ment with artificially refrigeratstorage indicate that 36 degrees heit is sufficiently low for all al purposes and that in the portion of the storage season a ature of 40 degrees Fahrenheit as satisfactory as a lower one where powdery dry rot infects n natural light should be excluded potato storage houses, because the tubers are exposed to even light they are soon injured for poses. A practical rule in re-humidity, the bulletin already ned says, is to maintain sufficient are in the air to prevent the wilt-of the tubers and at the same time keep the humidity content low to prevent the deposit of moison the surface of the tubers.

the potatoes are piled in too large they may become over-heated and erate. Six feet is a good maxidepth to which to pile tubers in and the area covered by each pile ould be limited. A good plan is art ventilated division walls at ls through the pile or bin. These made by nailing relatively nar-ards on both sides of 2x4 p-one inch spaces being left be-the boards. General ventilation the whole storage house usually is mplished through ventilating shafts roofs.

possible ways to store potatoes, the bulletin, are pits or earth-piles, in dugout pits or potato cellars, in insulated wood n houses, in substantial masonry or houses and in artificially re-storage houses. The latter hods are the most expensive.

sily accessible in the winter.

WILL BE WON
IN THE KITCHENS

great Kitchener said, "This war won in the kitchens." Cromwell nerve comes from his belly, full."

this the United States
partment has ordered an extra ved to the men on night watch, the food allowance, and sent out an urgent call for cooks, bakers, stewards, and mess attendants.

These great floating monsters, of our first line of defense, greatly resemble a first class hotel, with their large cold storage plants (stocked with fresh meats, fruits and vegetables) and large spotless kitchens, equipped with the latest electric ranges and appliances.
The navy offers a splendid position to both experienced cooks and bakers, and non-commissioned men in the mess department. The former will board ship at once, and the latter will be given a complete course at the navy cooking school, near San Francisco.

This will give many a young man the chance to travel, learn a trade, earn a good salary, and best of all strike a telling blow at the Kaiser.

Application for enlistment can be made to any postmaster or to the U.
S. navy recruiting station, Dekum building, Portland, Oregon.
