

WILL MOREY
WRITES FROM TRAINING CAMP

The following letter written December 2, was received by Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Morey from their son Will, who at that time was at the training camp at Long Island:

Dear Folks—We are still here, but I guess will be going somewhere soon now. We don't know where, but will go on transport. I saw in today's paper that the 42nd division was in France and we are supposed to go next.

I am transferred now. Am in what is known as the Mobile Ordnance Repair shops, a new organization, this being the first one the government ever had. I rank as private and its up to me to begin all over again. Our machinery has been shipped ahead of us and we will not be organized until we reach it. There should be good chances for promotion in this branch, but I'm afraid some "good fellows" will get the good jobs. However, I don't care a bit. What I want is not in the army and I'll never be satisfied here even if I should become a general.

I am inclined to think that this war is nearly done. It has lasted long enough and the nations can see now just what they wanted to know.

The company I'm now in is for the repair of tractors, trucks, field artillery and small arms. There will be three branches of it when fully organized. They gave me an examination on gas motors and I and one other man was all that passed out of about 50. All the rest of the men in our company came here from Rock Island arsenal, where they had had a few days training.

We have just finished reading a prophecy that the war would end soon. The thing was written by a monk in 1701 and his prediction has been very accurate. The story said the war would commence when the grain was ripening and would reach its height when the cherries were ripening for the third time, and that it would end after three years and five months in time for the Christmas mass. I only hope he knew what he was talking about.

I have eaten four Thanksgiving dinners this year and have not been out of camp yet. You see, our company is small and new and so we don't cook. We are assigned to a battalion of three companies for meals. We can go to any kitchen. In my case I went to all of them for turkey dinner, as they all had it different days. Then today I went over to the old company and they were just having it there. They were all fine meals, too. I cannot kick on the feed we got on special occasions or just ordinarily. We get well treated for an army; I think probably the best treatment of any army in the world.

This Y. M. C. A. is in a churah house in this little town and every Sunday night the ladies of the church bring cake and serve coffee and cake to the soldiers. It is a treat to us, as we lack sweets as much as any thing. We have two sugarless days a week in the army now. Those two days we get no sugar and we never do get very much of it anyway.

Red Cross Service Flags.

In thousands of American homes, in the days preceding the coming Yuletide, Red Cross service flags will occupy window space along with the wreaths of holly. These flags will be a feature of the Red Cross Christmas Membership campaign, which will run from December 17 to Christmas eve. A flag in the window will mean that a person in that home is a member of the Red Cross. Additional emblems on the flag will indicate the number of members of the household who have joined the Red Cross. If not already a Red Cross member a person living in a house that is as yet without the flag may join in the Christmas drive and obtain one for display.

The window service flags, which are transparent, will play a part in a nation-wide Christmas Eve demonstration that is to be the climax of the membership campaign. Candles are to burn behind the flags in every window on the night before Christmas, and at intervals church bells will chime in every community, while groups of Red Cross workers will parade the streets singing carols.

Farmers Should Raise Bees.

Every Oregon farm should have its colony of bees, say students in the school of commerce, who are making a study of the honey-producing possibilities of the state in connection with their survey of Oregon industries.

The alfalfa districts of Eastern Oregon are particularly adapted to bee culture, yet statistics show that only one farm in five has bees.

With the present necessity of conserving the nation's sugar supply honey can be successfully substituted in scores of places. Instead of a luxury it will become household necessity, in the opinion of many students.

TO TRADE—Ontario property, for Nyssa property or livestock, would take anything that could be used on the farm. Inquire at Journal Office.
