View Owyhee Project

The Portland Trade Excursionists to the number of 100 reached Nyssa on schedule time Tuesday morning and were given a cordial reception by the members of the local reception committee. Shortly after the party was taken in automobiles to view the wonders of the Owyhee Irrigation Project. Wednesday's Portland Oregonian contained the following account of what they saw:

Close to the Idaho boundary and at times on the deeply bitten us of the Old Oregon trail, Portland's trade excursionists toured the sagebrush country today and learned at first hand how potent is irrigation.

They saw the flats and valleys that lie between the big buff colored buttes, gray with the desolation of sage where the kindly water had not touched, but decked with huge haystacks, green alfalfa fields and prolific orchards, where the ditches carry their precious burden from the Owyhee and Malheur rivers.

"From Nyssa, the eastern Oregon outpost, on the Snake river, the excursionists set forth by automobile in the frosty morning to circle through the Owyhee Irrigation Project, where land that sold for $1.25 an acre but a few years ago now commands a price of $300 with the water on it.

"Not so long ago it was that the sagebrush country was lightly esteemed as fit only for jackrabbits and the roving coyote. Today Malheur county points to the awards won at the state fair, to its 18-foot corn and to its 65-bushel wheat as proof that the answer to state development in this section at least is in the streams that wind through the antelope pastures of yesterday.

"Help us to place up this vast territory of fertile soil the irrigation that is feasible," says the typical Malheur rancher, "and we will pour into Portland such an agricultural treasure as will demand recognition for your port."

A meeting of firemen was held Monday and the organization of a fire department perfected. Sidney Burbidge was elected president; Albert Cook, vice president; Aden Wilson, secretary; C. H. Prettyman, treasurer; C. J. Goerhart, fire chief; George Gilliam, assistant chief. The constitution and bylaws of the old fire department were adopted. Another meeting will be held Monday night to appoint a hose company. All interested are invited to attend.

J. Hunter, proprietor of the well known and popular Star Rooming and Boarding house is a believer in the use of printer's ink. He is running a first-class place and wants the public to know it. Read his ad in this issue.

PREPARE FOR WINTER.

Nyssa's celebrated weather prophet has again broken out and yesterday made the following prognostication of the future state of the weather:

"The indications are that we will have an early and long and severe winter. Squaw Butte is beginning to put on her mantle for the winter and the whale hunters are beginning to come in from the north and the storms are coming from the north."

This is the same weather prophet, however, who predicted last year that Snake river would be frozen over from shore to shore, so you don't have to believe him unless you wish to.
