Champion World's Welter-weight Wrestler, at Locust Park, Friday, August 19

Wrestling Match at Locust Park

World's Champion welterweight wrestler, Jack Reynolds to wrestle Robert Gibson at Locust Park, Aug. 19, 1921.

Reynolds agrees to throw Gibson twice in 45 minutes or forfeit the purse and match. In the event that Gibson secures a fall the match is over and Reynolds loses.

Gibson has defeated Chet Camp of Boise, as has Reynolds. We concede Reynolds to be the best welterweight in the state today, and think he can best any man in a finish match who can make the welterweight limit of 145 pounds, ringside; but there is a grave question in our minds as to whether he can defeat the local man, who claims the welterweight championship of the Northwest, in this handicap match.

Jack Reynolds came west for the express purpose of visiting his two brothers, over in Camas Prairie, Ida. but the wrestling fans of this part of the country upon learning of the Welter King being around so near, decided to try and secure his services for a few matches, and that is T. Francis.—Adv.

how this match came to be arranged. It is very seldom that people in these parts get to see world champions in action and the promoters should be commended for securing the best possible entertainment.

There will be three good preliminary bouts before the main event. The management of the park will have a worthy opponent to meet Ray Christensen, of Payette, for the heavyweight championship of the Northwest, Labor Day.

There will be a big dance at the close of the Reynolds-Gibson match.

Ringside seats $1.50 plus war tax. One lady admitted free with each ticket purchased. General admission $1. plus war tax.—Adv.
