ADVERTISING IS NEWS

It is a safe venture that 80 per cent. of the readers of news read the advertisements also shrewdly because of the general interest to be found in them. There is news value in a well-written advertisement, which is a thought for the consideration of those who think an advertising contract is something of a speculation, or who are careless in the preparation of their "copy."

An attractive advertisement compels the reader's attention. Every one knows how at times, even in the midst of an interesting news item, his eye has been deflected by some outstanding sentence in a nearby "ad," and how he has read the ad before returning to the news copy. Advertisements narrate the romance of business, they represent the individual's art, they are instructive.

For instance, the classified advertisement page. The persons are innumerable who read it, not because they are searching for something definite, but because each little "ad" tells of some thing of interest to the active mind. Many are those who, reading the classified page because of its general interest only, find something there that prompts them individually and directly, to reply, and perform a concrete service both for the advertiser and the reader.—Billings Montana Gazette.

SUMMARY OF FINANCES; O. N. G.

Oregon derived a net profit of $119,077 in the operation of its National Guard during the past year, according to an annual financial statement issued by George A. White, Adjutant General of the State. This was accomplished under the joint Army partnership with the Federal Government through which the United States Treasurer distributed in Army payrolls and Camp pay among 2100 Oregonians located in twenty Oregon cities the sum of $199,652.50, the total cost to the state of administration and upkeep being $79,975.

This year's profit was nearly four times as much as was derived from the Government's payrolls last year, due to the increase in size of the State service and success in meeting all Government requirements for pay of the Oregon citizen soldier. In addition to the $199,652 received in cash the State secured the award of Federal property amounting to $267,217.29.

Towns receiving bundles of U. S. Treasury checks for drill and Camp pay of citizens include Ashland, Madras, Marshfield, Newport, Toledo, Roseburg, Eugene, Albany, Salem, Portland, Independence, Corvallis, Dalles, McMinnville, Silverton, Woodburn and Lebanon.

Companies are now being formed at Cottage Grove, Hood River and Gresham. Companies are planned for other Oregon towns as soon as further Federal appropriations are made, as follows: Astoria, Tillamook, Hillsboro, Frest Grvs, Pendleton, LaGrande, Baker, Prineville, The Dalles, Bend, Grants Pass and Klamath Falls.

AGRICULTURE BASIC BUSINESS

"Opportunities in agriculture should be comparable to those in any other business—the industry should be stabilized so that the farmer may depend on reasonable profits," said Dr. W. J. Kerr to a group of Oregon farmers at college farmers' week, Roosevelt was quoted to the effect that America's whole system rests upon the farm and that welfare of the whole community depends upon the welfare of the farmer. This was said to be as true today as when made. Science is now in rapidly increasing degrees, it is noted, in helping the farmer meet the agricultural needs of the world in the great agricultural state of Illinois 25 years ago only 25 students were studying agriculture. Oregon had but 109 agricultural students 12 years ago, but 900 last year.

Starting Clover Explained.

Four common methods of starting clover were explained to Oregon farmers by G. R. Hyslop, chief of farm crops at O. A. C. Experiment station. The surest way of getting a stand in western Oregon was said to be sowing in February on fall-planted grain. This is adapted to soils in good tilth where clover grows successfully. Barley is the best nurse crop, wheat good, but not undesirable. Light soils may be seeded on fall plowed land, but the crop is often damaged by freezing. Sown with spring grain clover often fails. Inoculation is needed where no native clover or volunteer plants are growing. An application of 50 to 100 pounds land plaster per acre will help the plant through the dry season. Early winter pasturing is advised.

LUND AND CARLSEN.

Synopsis—Loitering on the East Francisco water front, John Rainey, newspaper reporter, is accosted by a giant blind man, who asks Rainey to lead him aboard the sealing schooner Karluk. In the cabin they find Captain Simms and a man named Carlsen. Simms recognizes the blind man, calling him Jim Lund. Lund accuses Simms of abandoning him, blind, on an ice floe, and denounces him. Simms denies the charge, but Lund refuses to be pacified. He declares his intention of accompanying the Karluk on its expedition north, where it is going in quest of a gold field which Lund has discovered. Peggy Simms' daughter, is aboard, and defends her father. Carlsen, who is a physician as well as first mate, drugs Rainey. Awakening from his stupor, Rainey finds himself at sea. Carlsen informs him he has been kidnaped. He offers Rainey a share of the gold, and Rainey is forced to declare himself satisfied. Lund gives him a brief account of a former expedition of the Karluk, entirely in the hands of Carlsen. At the latter's suggestion a shooting match is staged and the seal hunters exhaust their ammunition. Carlsen shows his skill with the pistol and Lund does some astonishing shooting "by sound." Sandy, the ship's boy, is swept overboard and is rescued by Rainey, who thus wins Peggy's admiration. The captain gets worse. Sandy tells how Carlsen is stirring up trouble over the division of the gold. Carlsen draws a gun on Rainey, who overpowers him. Tamada, the mysterious Japanese cook, declares himself neutral.

"All right, sir," Rainey answered getting a thrill at this first actual intimation of the meeting. Hansen, it seemed, was not to be one of the representatives of the seamen. And Carlsen had been smart enough to forestall Lund's demand for Rainey by taking some of the wind out of the giant's sails and doing the unexpected. Unless the hunters had suggested that Rainey be present. But that was hardly likely, considering that he was to be left out of the deal.
"In just what capacity are you called in this conference?" Lund asked, when Carlsen notified him in turn. "The skipper ain't dead, is he?"
"I represent the captain, Lund," replied the doctor. "He entirely approves of what I am about to suggest to you and the men. In fact I have his signature to a document that I hope you will sign also. It will be great to your interest to do so. I am in present charge of the Karluk."
"You ain't a regular member of this expedition," objected Lund stolidly. "Neither am I a member of the crew just now. But the skipper's my partner in this deal, signed, sealed and recorded. In fact I go to enny meetin' I like to have a talk with him personally. Theirs fair enough, ain't it?"
Several of the hunters had gathered about, and Lund's question seemed general appeal. Carlsen shrugged his shoulders.
"If you had your eyesight," he said almost brutally, "you could soon see that the skipper was in no condition to discuss matters, much less be present."
"Here's my eyesight," countered Lund. "Mr. Rainey here. Let him see the skipper and ask him a question or two?"
"What kind of a question? I'm asking as his doctor, Lund."
"For one thing if he's read the paper you say he signed, I want to be sure of that. An' I don't make it enny more business, Carlsen, what I want to say to my partner, by proxy or otherwise. Second thing, I'd like to be sure he's still alive. As for your standin' as his doctor, all I've got to say is the skipper's a d—d pore doctor, so far as the two men stood facing each other, Carlsen looking evilly at the giant, whose black glasses warded off his glance. It was wasting looks to glare at a blind man. Equally to sneer at the boat between the two was timed now, and both were cast aside any veneer of diplomacy, the enmity manifesting itself in the man. The issue was growing tense.
Rainey fancied that Carlsen was not entirely sure of his following, and relied upon Lund's indignant refusal to terms to back up his plans of getting rid of him decisively.

CHAPTER VII.

The Show-Down.
"Rainey can see the skipper," said Carlsen carefully.
"All right," said Lund. "Will you take Rainey? Now?" And Rainey, a fleeting fancy that the giant had one of his blind eyes at his high the black lenses were detected.
He went below immediately and tapped on the door, a little surprised to see the girl appear in the open. The drawn expression of her face, it seemed faint smile with which it greeted him. He hopeless look in his eyes, startled him.
