FOREST FIRES THREATEN.

Unless rain quickly intervenes, the entire Pacific region is threatened by the most serious forest fire situation ever known so early in the year, according to June 1 bulletins received today by the Western Forestry and Conservation from forest protective agencies throughout the five coast states from Montana to California.

Already, although there has been little damage to merchantable timber, there has been much loss of second-growth, logs and equipment, and a settler was burned to death in southern Oregon. Extreme dryness everywhere is reported. "The worst at this time in 38 years" is one bulletin. Another says "A comparison with June 1 last year is like comparing the Sahara Desert with the ocean". A few hours of wind or of falling humidity, all authorities agree, will result in the breaking of bounds by a multitude of fires due to loggers, campers and settlers who have not realized the extraordinarily early hazard. All agencies are uniting to impress them with the urgency of absolute care with fire from now on and the laws will be rigidly enforced.

The Governor of Idaho has issued a proclamation stopping all slash burning. State forest boards in other states are meeting to discuss unusual regulatory measures. The United States Forest Service is contemplating closing the national forests to visitors. The state of Oregon has appealed to the War Department for airplanes to assist in patrol. The U. S. Weather Bureau has already agreed to detail meteorologists to perfect a forecast system to advise protective agencies and loggers of weather conditions affecting the spread of fire. Demand for humidity-reading instruments by forest officers and logging camps has exhausted the Pacific Coast supply and telegraphic orders are rushing the factories. Newspapers are being urged to give every assistance by cartoons and editorials to bring the situation before motorists, campers, settlers and loggers, so that fires, matches and cigarettes will always be completely extinguished. Patrol and fire-fighting forces are everywhere being swiftly recruited to full strength but unless every precaution is taken, the experts say, there is grave danger of conflagrations beyond the power of the fire-fighting agencies to control, resulting in heavy loss of life and property.

OFFICIAL DESIGN OF THE OLD OREGON TRAIL ASSOCIATION

The design of the ox team and covered wagon symbolizes the spirit of the old west. It typifies vision, endurance, hope, suffering and final accomplishment.

Over the Old Oregon Trail from the Missouri river the covered wagons came and won an empire for the United States. The design is the work of Avard Fairbanks of the University of Oregon.
