In order to help cultivate musical appreciation in the schools, we would thank anyone in the community that has a Victrola who would be willing to let us use a few of their records for a short period at a time. The principal will be personally responsible for getting them and their return, as well as for their use. We think an appreciation and knowledge of the best music is an essential part of any educational system and we would like to make use of our Victrolas for such a purpose. If you care to help us out please send in your name, or let the principal or our teachers know personally.

Talking Honey

There's a lot of work done in producing a pound of honey.

In the form of nectar, as thin as water, the bees collect it from the flowers, drop by drop, and carry in their honey sacks to the hive and deposit it in the honey comb, which they make from pure beeswax. (Beeswax itself they make from honey). Then they "ripen" it, by fanning it with their wings until it becomes thick, and much of the water evaporated. After it is "ripened," they put an airtight capping over it made from pure wax.

It is estimated that it requires 40,000 trips of a honey bee to gather one pound of honey. As a worker bee wears itself out in about six weeks in a heavy honey flow and then dies of overwork, it is evident that it takes a great many bees a great many trips to gather a single pound of the honey that you buy for a few cents.

After the bees have completed the work of gathering, storing and ripening the honey there is still a great deal of work to be done by human hands before the honey is ready for your table.

On this part of the labor depends much of the quality of the honey you eat. I'll tell you more about it in my next talk.
