FOSTERING INDUSTRY

We are living in an industrial age. Modern industry has created new demands which must be met. Comforts and conveniences undreamed of a quarter of a century ago are now available to the wage-earner and the farmer. Their manufacture and distribution give employment to millions of people. What the future holds in the way of further devices for the betterment of living conditions no man can foresee.

The time is coming when every progressive community will be to some extent an industrial community. It follows, then, that those communities which bestir themselves toward the securing of industrial enterprises are the ones that will go forward most rapidly.

The greatest force back of industrial development is electrical power. Where we find an abundance of electrical power at a low cost we find industrial expansion. No industry today is so eager to promote the development of new industries and the expansion of old ones as is the electrical industry.

In every state it is taking the lead in the encouragement of all other enterprises. Electricity is the only commodity of general use that is now sold at a price below that of pre-war days. By the interconnection of generating systems current is now available to small communities and even to the rural districts which small local plants could never reach.

Still, there has recently sprung up a considerable group of demagogues and government ownership advocates who would hamper and retard the industrial progress which the electrical industry has made possible. Unless forward looking citizens support and foster the expansion of manufacturing and public service enterprises, instead of shackling them through burdensome legislation, much harm to our entire industrial structure, and consequently to the public, will be the inevitable result.

Resourceful persons seldom fail to find an honorable means of making a livelihood if they use their wits. A New York woman does a good business minding babies while mothers are at the movies; a public stenographer located at a windy corner adds to her income by displaying a sign: "Dust and cinders removed from the eyes." Her "patients" are grateful and pay accordingly.

THE FARMER'S HANDICAP

In every productive enterprise there enter three distinct factors, each of which is vital to success—capital, labor and management. The most important of the three is management, and lack of sound management constitutes the farmer's greatest handicap.

The idea that anyone can conduct any business without giving thought to the innumerable details under the head of management is fatal to success.

In the case of the farmer these include decisions as to the acreage of various crops to be planted, choice of soil, selection of seed, use of fertilizer if needed, employment of machinery, methods of cultivation and harvesting, and last but not least, marketing.

It must be borne in mind that in every line of production new methods and new labor-saving devices are being constantly developed. A manufacturer who continues to employ obsolete methods and machinery is unable to compete with one who takes advantage of every improvement for reducing production costs.

The price for which a product is sold does not determine profit or loss, except when considered in connection with the cost of production. In the case of cotton, for example, an instance is cited by a recent bulletin in which two young men in western Texas last year produced 140 bales of cotton on 150 acres with only their own labor, except for picking. Planting and cultivating were done by machine plows, their soil required no fertilizer, a favorable season enabled them to escape insect damage.

The same bulletin states that to produce this crop in the old cotton belt would ordinarily require 21 plow hands, 42 hoe hands and 21 mules, with 52 tons of fertilizer on 420 acres of land. Yet the cotton produced by the two methods brings the same price, in one case representing a handsome profit, in the other a positive loss.

In the case of other crops similar differences in cost of production exist, depending largely upon the methods employed, as well as upon the fertility of the soil. Sound management is as important in farming as in any other productive activity, and this fact can not be too strongly emphasized.

SIDELIGHTS

A Georgia paper commends a judge for his consideration in refraining from addressing a civic club meeting on account of the lateness of the hour and declares that the club "appreciated this fine courtesy." Unfortunately, the judge's fine courtesy is not likely to be widely imitated.

An income tax suit disclosed that J. F. White of Los Angeles pays his wife $100,000 for each child she bears him, this being agreed upon before their marriage. If a man had to go through the ordeal he would perhaps consider that figure about right.

The average lawyer's brief is anything but.

Americanism: Voting more bonds; howling about taxes.

"Have another" has been superseded by "Ask me another."

Naturally, the heaviest transactions are in the pig iron market.

It isn't wise to assert too much personality at a busy street intersection.

Often a man pays a lawyer for advice his wife could give him for nothing.

American progress will not halt so long as there are enough corners for the filling stations.

Henry Ford says that when the automobile came booze had to go. And most of it went by automobiles and Fords.

Beautiful girls are more plentiful than intellectual ones, says a grouch, who adds that this is in keeping with the demand.

The success of prohibition may possibly be reflected in the recent 100 per cent stock dividend declared by Coco Cola.

Dean Inge says that the only way to be really orthodox is not to think at all. Many find no difficulty in being orthodox.

President Coolidge doesn't wear his ten-gallon cowboy hat very often, but perhaps he is saving it to toss in the ring next year.

"Mother's Vacation" is the title of a new movie. It is about the only kind of vacation the majority of mothers will ever see.

Justice Charles L. Guy wants to make marriage harder. Well, it's hard enough for ordinary folks now. But perhaps the justice is a particularly hard Guy.

Most of us envy the fellow who is morally and financially independent enough to stay away from people and places that bore him stiff.
