EFFECT OF MERGERS

Hearings on legislation intended to bring about further consolidation of railroads will be held shortly after Congress meets, according to Chairman Watson of the interstate commerce committee, who recently expressed the opinion that a bill providing for these mergers will be passed at the coming session.

Not only is it expected to permit consolidations, but to make them compulsory where deemed necessary in the interest of the public. The general effect of these mergers is to secure economy of operation and better service by making more efficient use of equipment and personnel. Inasmuch as the establishment of rates and conditions of service is in the hands of public regulatory bodies, the interests of the public are amply protected, regardless of the size of the railroad systems which may be formed.

A CENTURY'S ADVANCE

From the advent of the railroad until the beginning of practical aerial transportation there elapsed approximately a century. The mighty advances of science and invention which came in between these epochal events were so great as to tax the imagination. Within the span of these hundred years a thousand marvels have been born, which it would take months of research to enumerate and describe. Consider a few, jotted down off-hand:

Railroads, steel ships, perfected cotton gins, the telegraph, the telephone, photography, the phonograph, the sewing machine, the X-ray, radio, anaesthetics, sanitation, radium, motion pictures, automobiles, aircraft, television and many others, improvements and refinements which have been added to the original inventions and discoveries.

The advance of the past 100 years appears all the more remarkable when we reflect that mankind has lived and labored under some sort of civilized conditions for at least 10,000 years. The achievements of the last century have been greater than those of all the hundred centuries which preceded it.

THE FORGOTTEN MAN

In a recent address, in which he again voiced his plea for better procedure in bringing criminals to justice, Chief Justice Taft referred to the victim of the murderer as the forgotten man.

Newspaper reports of murder trials bring into limelight the personality of the criminal, upon whom more maudlin sympathy is frequently expended, while the unfortunate victim and his dependents are too often forgotten.

While approving measures for inducing criminals to forsake their evil ways and become law-abiding citizens, Mr. Taft feels that we should not permit our interest in criminals to interfere with the effective prosecution of crime.

Under our present system, where every provision of law appears to be in favor of the criminal, it is next to impossible to secure a prompt conviction and execution of sentence, particularly for murder. Legal technicalities serve to thwart the administration of justice at every turn. New trials, stays of execution, paroles and pardons all encourage potential criminals to take the chance of escaping punishment, and many whose guilt is not doubted do so escape.

As Mr. Taft suggests, it is time that we should think somewhat less of the criminal and give some consideration to his victim—the forgotten man.
