Small Army of Unpaid Observers of Weather

Thousands of men and women act as unpaid "co-operative" observers of the United States weather bureau. Thanks to the services of these persons, daily weather records are maintained at nearly 5,000 places in this country, and in many cases the records have been kept with hardly a break for 50 years or more by an individual observer or by members of the same family. These records are sent monthly to Washington and serve as the raw material from which climatic statistics are prepared for all parts of the country. The bureau supplies to each observer a rain-gauge, a maximum thermometer for registering the highest temperature of the day, a minimum thermometer, which registers the lowest, and a wooden thermometer and screen, or shelter. The observer reads his instruments once a day—usually about sunset—and enters the readings in his register, together with a record of various special weather events, such as frosts, thunderstorms, tornadoes, auroras and optical phenomena.

BUTTONS AND BUCKLES ADORN GARMENTS FOR SPRING WEAR

Attractive Sports Model.

MOTHER-of-pearl buttons buckles and slides are being featured as high style ornamentation for spring by leading couturiers in this country and abroad. Designers are enthusiastic about the fashion possibilities of mother-of-pearl, first, because it provides wide diversity both in black and white and vivid colorings to contrast or harmonize with the color and texture of the fabric it trims, and second, because it is a genuine material which cannot be imitated.

Both from a useful and an ornamental standpoint, the spring style program emphatically declares the importance of buttons. Buttons especially lend a brightness and new interest to active and spectator sportswear in cottons, linens, shantungs, bemberg weaves and the new worsted and silk costumes.

Gleaming mother-of-pearl buttons and a buckle in matching color tones distinguishes the attractive sports model in the picture. This gay and stunning costume is fashioned of a whipped twill of bemberg and silk in red and white. The generous uses of buttons which so enhances this smart outfit is indicative of the new trend. Note the unique collar-and-scarf neckline, novel scarf arrangements being another outstanding characteristic of the mode.

Speaking of the existent flair for mother-of-pearl decoration, sometimes a single buckle or slide of unusual design is the only trimmings used, but always with extreme effectiveness. Lustrous mother-of-pearl slides in delicate shapes and natural rainbow irridescence are being employed by leading fashionists to fasten belts for formal afternoon and evening wear, especially in connection with the very chic black-and-white ensembles and for the formal dinner pajamas and hostess gown.

An admiring audience at a recent spring style show of note was particularly charmed with a dinner pajama ensemble of pale green satin crepe of bemberg with a jacket of lame tissue in green and gold, the same ornamented at the belt with a green mother-of-pearl lotus flower.

Leading Parisian coutouriers are high-lighting grays combined with pink colorings. Exquisite mother-of-pearl ornamentation in the way of buttons, slides, and buckles is blended with this fabric tone with striking effect.

The Pajama Costume.

Speaking of the pajama costume, time was when its scenes of triumph were confined to the boudoir and the beach, but nowadays. . . . modern pajamas are traveling about most everywhere "in society." Veritable gadabouts have these trousered modes become. From the boudoir and the beach they are venturing out into all sorts of new environment—at the dance, if you please, and in the drawing room where as hostess pajamas fashion's elite is accepting them with utmost enthusiasm.

To play this role of hostess and dine and dance pajamas successfully these trousered and divided-skirt modes are affecting the airs and graces of milady's most beguiling frocks. In fact, at times the resemblance is puzzling.

Coming this spring and summer, the stage is all set for ultra-modern pajama fashions as charming and styled as cleverly to occasion as the graceful models pictured. For the attractive costume on the seated figure the designer selected pale yellow triple georgette of bemberg. It brings into play several details which make for chic this season. There is, for instance, the cowl-drape neckline, also the low-placed wide revers and of special style significance are the bell-shape flowing sleeves, likewise the circular-cut ruffled drape.

Fashion also bestows a smile of approval on the modernistic dinner pajama ensemble posed to the right in the illustration. Its full-skirt trousers are styled of pale green lustrous satin of bemberg and silk. The circular-flounced jacket is of lame tissue in green and gold fastened with a gleaming mother-of-pearl lotus flower.

In the instance of formal pajamas, a fascinating model designed for dinner-party wear is shown, made of black lace, the tiers of flounces and the off-the-shoulder decolletage making it look just like a dress.

Printed silks of extreme elegance and formality contribute their beauty to the pajama mode, designers embodying in their styling the very self same details as distinguish afternoon and evening frocks.

No Inferiority Complex About Daniel Webster

Undoubtedly the acceptance of Daniel Webster's greatness by his contemporaries was due in part to his own consciousness of it, and his skill in imposing his conception of himself on others.

Even as a poor boy at Dartmouth college he had a passion for clothes. For great oratorical occasions he always wore a bright blue coat with brass buttons, and a buff waistcoat. There is more than a suspicion that he stage managed his entrances and exits.

Claude Moore Fuess, in his biography, "Daniel Webster," quotes a Dartmouth graduate who remarked that "in the political processions of his youth, he never saw Webster except marching alone in a hollow square, and that without any planning on the part of the authorities in charge." Like other actors, he needed his audience. While Emerson communed with the infinite through his diary, Webster thought of himself in terms of public appearance.

Webster directed his deathbed scene with a formality such as attends the passing of a cardinal or pope. After his dying oration he lapsed into drowsiness, but revived to inquire: "Have I—wife, son, doctors, friends, are you all here?—have I, on this occasion, said anything unworthy of Daniel Webster?"—Robert Morse Lovett in the New Republic.
