New Secretary of State Hales From Tennessee; Is Man of Broad Service

Editor's Note: This is the first of a series of articles which will give the history of members of the Roosevelt cabinet. Who are they?

Washington—When the Ambassador of Moldavia marches into the massive and musty State, War and Navy Building to call on the new Secretary of State, he will be popping with curiosity and prepared for change. But as he leaves, along with his interest and surprise he will say, "Well, here is a man with whom I can do business."

For, above his other personal qualities, Senator Cordell Hull inspires confidence.

In one dominant respect, the new Secretary of State is an authority. He has mastered trade and tariff problems as have few men. He summarizes his views in these words:

"World peace depends largely upon the sort of economic policies maintained by the important nations."

"The world today, under American leadership over the last 10 years, is in a virtual state of economic war. There can be no real progress toward confidence and peace nor permanent trade recovery while retaliations and bitter trade controversies rage."

No Surpluses Piled Up

"Any practical person must now realize that if this and other nations could have profitably exchanged their respective surpluses since 1921 there would have been no surpluses piled up, no stagnation with resultant widespread unemployment, no agricultural collapse, no vast concentration of gold in one country."

From this philosophy, Senator Hull concludes that war debts are but one aspect in a broad problem. He would first find a way around or through the world trade impasse. Then he expects the debt problem to be soluble.

Interest centers on the practical side of Senator Hull's equipment. His first great achievement was to write the income tax laws of 1913 and 1916. A practical job, in a technical field. Then he had a desk in the Collector of Internal Revenue's office during the latter years of the Wilson Administration. He is credited with planning America's wartime financial structure.

Only after the 1920 election, when Democracy went forth into the wilderness, did the new Secretary of State enter a field which may illustrate his ability in broad practical politics. In 1921 he was Democratic national chairman.

In 1924 and 1928, the Tennessean opposed the Alfred E. Smith wing of the party, standing by his guns as a staunch dry and a low-tariff man. And not long afterward, looking ahead to 1932, he began to work quietly for Franklin D. Roosevelt. This paved his road to the Cabinet. At Chicago, still working for the dry cause, he lost. But he was with those who turned back the Smith faction and put the low-tariff plank back in the Democratic platform.

He Has No Hobbies

Mr. Hull has no standard recreation or hobbies. He plays no games particularly. He goes in for no sport. All his leisure time is spent in digging into some fascinating new or old subject. Thus his mind has become well stocked with a wide range of information.

Coupled with these present qualities is a background which is particularly American. Cordell Hull was born of a medium-prosperous farmer on the Cumberland plateau of north-central Tennessee.

His father prospered by trading land and timber. At his passing a few years ago he left a comfortable estate. He fished logs down the Cumberland River from Carthage to Nashville. The boy spent many a night floating down stream on a log raft. He was, however, always studious and his father was proud of this quality. The boy studied in district schools, distinguished himself, and was sent to Cumberland University in Lebanon Tenn.

After getting his law degree, the young man settled down to practice, moved to Celina, Tenn., went to the State Legislature, went to the Spanish-American War as a captain of volunteers, spent several years as a circuit judge, and finally graduated into the House of Representatives in 1906. From then until the present, excepting only 1920-22, he has served in Congress. Courtesy Christian Science Monitor.

Clean Your Home 'BEHIND THE EARS!'

Many good housekeepers change table cloths, napkins, bed sheets regularly—but seldom think of their germ-laden Rugs, Carpets, Curtains, Drapes, Fancy Pillows or Overstuffed Furniture. Your vacuum cleaner removes only the loose surface dust—which is all it is meant to do. Household furnishings should have that imbedded dust, set fast greasy soil removed at least once each year.

Ask the CAPITAL CLEANERS how reasonably they can refresh your home furnishings.
