Beautiful Maidens Add Local Color To Basque Community at Jordan

Jordan Valley, nestled at the foot of rimrock cliffs, is about 80 miles south of Nyssa on the I-O-N. It has long been known as one of the most picturesque stockmen's villages in this section, principally because of its large population of well educated and hospitable Basques. Although many of them are now citizens of America, they retain the Basque lore, "old Spanish customs" and their maidens—the dusky Basque beauty.

The Journal staff found Jordan Valley a delightful and beautiful place on a visit last spring. Later, Amos Burg, of the National Geographic, found its maidens a decided attraction for the Oregon issue of his magazine which will be published this year. And now comes the Oregonian with an entertaining sketch of Jordan and its people. Pictures of Amalia (Mollie) Elorriaga and Juanita Zabala, in old-country garments, Gus Azucenaga and a view of the sandstone cliffs at Rome added local color. Excerpts from the article by E. M. Miller follow:

"The road to Jordan Valley extends through a series of butte lands and robust canyons where a sheer basalt wall rises 300 feet to impress the visitor with its mighty bulk. "The little city of Jordan—a good fire might bring out 300 people—is spread principally along a wide street with neat homes nearby. Excellent metals were obtained in Jordan. At a Basque boarding house we found a wide variety of food and a most congenial atmosphere. A handsome girl served us. "We spent quite a spell with Gus Azucenaga, who spends day and night at his store and ranks as one of the important figures of the Basque community. From him we gained the story of his people's migration from Spain. "Some 55 years ago, said Mr. Azucenaga, a Basque sea captain came to San Francisco, learned of recently opened up country on Nevada way, and took the new railroad to Winnemucca, a hustling western city not far from the Oregon line. The sea captain liked the country right well and decided to stay long enough to make his fortune. Then he returned to Spain and spread the tidings of a great sheep country in western United States where great profits might be had through herding and owning sheep. His word was sufficient. First a few, and then more and more of the thrifty Basques took the long trail to the new sheep country. Mr. Azucenaga was one of the very first Basques in Jordan Valley. He hailed from the Bay of Biscaya country of northern Spain, not far from the fashionable Spanish coastal resort, San Sebastian. "Today the Basques are numbered at 15,000 or 20,000 persons. Perhaps more. They are known as industrious (Continued on page 6)
