Seed of New Potato Sort Now Available in State

Katahdin potato seed is now available in fairly large amounts in Oregon, according to E. R. Jackman, extension agronomist at Oregon State college. This is the U. S. D. A. variety which, under test in Oregon, has proved immune to mild mosaic and resistant to other forms of mosaic diseases.

Tubers are rounded and free from knobs and other second growth. They have shallow eyes, white flesh, and possess excellent cooking qualities. Western Oregon growers reported last year that the variety stayed green much longer than Burbanks, being more drought resistant. It is considered an excellent variety for use on heavy soils that tend to produce number twos of other sorts.
