THE MAN YOU ALL KNOW

When the question of buying merchandise arises, we should first think of the home man—the one who lives in this community, who knows you. This home merchant belongs to the same churches, lodges and other organizations as you, and is a part of this community.

He buys from other dealers at home for the needs of himself and his family. The money he thus spends remains here.

He pays taxes, supports the churches, gives to funds for the improvement of the community, helps finance civic entertainments, gives to the needy and is continually paying out money for some local cause.

His employees live here and the money he pays them is kept in circulation here.

The merchandise is as he represents else he could not remain in business long. He holds his trade only by selling quality merchandise of the right price. He cannot afford to overcharge because his customers would soon learn by comparison that he was defrauding him.

Let's give the home man first consideration. Only by this method can a strong and healthful community be built up. Every dollar spent away from home is tearing down home; every dollar spent here is building up home.
