Sales Tax Question--

The question of a sales tax is to come before the people of Oregon in January and already the talk has started pro and con. We would like to quote here from an article by Ray W. Gill, Master of the Oregon State Grange and published in the Oregon Journal Thursday. Mr. Gill says:

"For the third time the Oregon legislature has opposed the will of the people in passing a sales tax, and for the second time it has defied the people who voted strongly against it.

"The first time, it was sugar-coated with the plea to save the state from going bankrupt on account of delinquent taxes; the second time, it was to save the schools; and now it is the old age pension. This bill, like the rest of the sales tax bills in Oregon, or in the nation, is promoted by big corporations and big property owners who seek to shift their tax responsibility upon the backs of the people in the average walks of life. The procedure in the legislature was exactly the same as in the previous sessions. A big calamity was in store if we did not get the revenue, and there was no other way but a sales tax, so they said. But the legislative committee of the Oregon State grange had pointed out sources for more than the amount needed for old pensions. But among their proposals were increased income taxes, and, of course, Big Business did not want them so they pushed it aside."

The attitude of the grange is clearly seen in this statement of the state master. The sales tax in principal, hits the man or woman least able to carry a tax burden. To the man or woman making good money, a few pennies more or less, make but little difference. To the man struggling along trying to keep body and soul and perhaps a family, together; the few pennies added to each purchase make a tremendous difference to his wellbeing.

It is true that there are many states who have a sales tax, the best example being across the river in Idaho. Whether it will decrease the general tax levy is a matter of question. The strategy of the people pushing the sales tax is clearly seen however, when a bill passed in the closing moments of the session, removing the state appropriation of $1,000,000 that was lying in the state treasury for old age pensions. It was a "squeeze play" designed to force a passage of an old age pension act by the sales tax route.

There is another angle brought out by Master Gill when he says, "Some of the legislators have consistently supported a sales tax, and their action was to be expected, but there were many other who openly stated that they wanted to put the Townsend people in a hole by passing a state old age pension financed by a sales tax. Some did not want any pension at this time, and thought this way a way to kill it by giving lip service to the pension idea while passing a sales tax that would surely be killed."
