THREAT MADE TO CURTAIL FREEDOM OF THE PRESS—

An organization has been formed in Portland to take up the case of the so-called Donohue Amendment to be on the ballot during the November election. This Amendment merely provides that no state governing body shall ever limit or inhibit honest, truthful advertising. This organization expects to present facts to the people, showing why honest, truthful advertising serves a purpose and no bureau or board should be allowed to abrogate this right.

It would seem that this truth is self evident. Yet there is a constant effort on the part of special interests endeavoring to forbid advertising.

We can give advertising credit for a great many advancements in human progress, and the most elementary reasoning will show this. Without advertising, all newspapers and magazines would be impossible except at a prohibitive price. Today we can get news of the nation, of the state or of Nyssa at a reasonable price, solely through the fact that advertising revenue makes it possible to bring you a vast amount of reading matter at a comparatively low cost. The same case holds true with magazines; how would you like to plunk down a dollar for a magazine you now buy for five cents?

Without advertising, radio would be almost an impossibility. It is a well known fact that advertising sponsors bring you the music, plays, news, shows and other features heard over the air. How would you like to have to pay five dollars a month for the privilege of turning on your radio, or slip a dime in a slot every time you wanted to get the correct time?

But advertising serves an even greater service. An active advertising policy means quick turnover, and consequently lower prices to the buying public. Advertising keeps you informed, keeps the wheels of commerce turning, educates you to values and is the cheapest medium the business man can use to put his message before the public.

Homes and Gardens

By Mrs. C. W. Barrett

Well here we are again and I believe it is shade trees we are to discuss this time. Maybe some of you will think it is too early to talk about setting out shade trees, we don't think about them in time.

Shade trees should be set out just as soon after the frost has left the ground as possible and especially is that true if they are to be dug from a nursery and re-set. Of course trees that have been kept in cold storage can be set out later as they are more dormant than the trees dug from the outside, but even they should be set out as early as possible.

I will endeavor to give a list of the quickest growing and the lowest priced trees and will begin with poplars. The Carolina poplar is the most rapid grower of that family of trees and is the best for this part of the state. The Lombardy poplar is not a desirable shade tree, however two or three of them in a group at the back or to one side nearest to the back of the grounds, fit in nicely in landscaping. They add height and distinction to an otherwise flat appearing place.

The maples come next as a fast grower. The silver maples are perhaps the fastest growers. The wood is soft but is a long lived tree. One good point about it is that it will grow in any kind of soil. If they are planted out early quite large trees can be used that will give some shade the first season. The Norway maple does well here too but does not grow so rapidly as the silver maples but makes a beautiful spreading tree when not crowded by other trees. The American white ash is another fast growing tree and a lot of them are used in the irrigated part of the state and of course there is the lowly locust of whom everybody is acquainted. It needs no introduction and can well be left to the choice of the planter.

Then comes the box elder. It is another rapid grower and makes a pretty shade but is not as popular as some of the above trees. I do not advise anyone to set out elm trees at this time unless they are prepared to spray them for the elm beetle. America has been justly proud of her beautiful elm trees and is spending thousands of dollars every year fighting the Dutch blight. How soon, is ever, these diseases will be controlled without a big expense, is hard to tell.

Now this gives a very good list of quick growing, low priced trees for the farm home. Where there is room I advise setting out a small grove of locusts. They quickly grow into fence posts and are also valuable as shade for livestock and poultry. There is a long list of more expensive trees that will do well here, but right now we are more interested in trees that will give quick shade for the new settlers.

In 1912 when the water was turned in the Shoestring canal to the settlers, I was one of the new settlers, with my husband and children. All of us were "greenhorns" from the east but we cleared the sage brush from the ground and put in a crop. We had no shade trees the first year, so I feel interested in helping all I can to get trees and lots of trees planted on the new land.

M. H. asked me if I would say something in my column to the people in town and the farm, anywhere the Journal reaches, about outdoor Christmas trees or living Christmas trees. What she meant was for everyone who could do so to plant an Evergreen tree this spring somewhere near the house that can be lighted from the porchlight at Christmas time. There are waterproof electric cords and colored lights now on the market for just that purpose. Outdoor live Christmas trees are becoming more popular every year and are an asset to any home. They are pretty with lights, pretty in the snow and fit in lovely with the flowers in the summer. Thank you, M. H. for telling me and I hope we see a lot of them next Christmas. They can be used quite small at first with just a few lights and a few more lights can be added as it grows larger. The Colorado spruce both in the blue and green foliage make pretty trees for this purpose. Then there are several others that do quite as well, such as the different sorts of junipers.

G. W.—Will not have room for your letter this week but will get it in next week.

E. S.—I thank you for the fan letter I received in Mondays mail. Hope you will not be the only one who was benefitted by the column. I will send to anyone who will enclose a postal card the name of a nurseryman in driving distance of your home who has all the above trees and many more I haven't named here.
