NEWELL RECOMMENDED FOR COMMISSIONER OF RECLAMATION—

LAST Thursday the directors of the Wilder Irrigation district by formal resolution endorsed R. J. Newell, resident reclamation engineer with headquarters at Ontario, for selection as United States commissioner of reclamation to succeed Dr. Elwood Mead, deceased.

Their choice was a wise one and shows what practical irrigation men feel about Mr. Newell. Although it is unlikely that any campaign could be started now that would land Mr. Newell the post, it is important in that it shows the confidence reposed in Newell. In order to get this post for Mr. Newell, the campaign would have had to started earlier; but it is a well known fact that his qualifications and abilities would fit him for the job. The important thing is not that a Democrat or a Republican be chosen, but that a man be picked that will have the confidence of the west and one who will have the support of the western states' congressional delegations. To the west, reclamation is far more important than politics.

CANNING FACTORY TO BE BUILT AT FRUITLAND—

FRUITLAND residents had a reason to be pleased last week when articles of incorporation were filed for a new cannery in their city, backed by local capital and with a vision toward the future. What struck us in the announcement was the fact that a prominent business man of Ontario offered to furnish the building site if the cannery would be built in Ontario.

Now this particular cannery will no doubt be built in Fruitland, but there is room for other canneries; and plenty of room and opportunity for a cannery in Nyssa. It is not beyond the realms of possibility that if a responsible cannery company wished to locate in Nyssa, a building site could be furnished and any other reasonable concession could be granted.

Nyssa is in the peculiar position of being surrounded with a territory ideally suited for the growing of cannery products. We have the soil, the water, the climate and growers willing to go ahead; and are almost surrounded with canneries just a bit too far away.

At Payette the Idaho Canning Company is contracting sweet corn but admit, that the territory around Nyssa, especially to the south, is a bit too long a haul to make cannery products profitable. On the other side we have a cannery at Wilder; but it is just a bit too far away. The Fruitland cannery will be closer, but still the long haul will eat into the margin of profit.

We need a cannery located right in Nyssa and it is a virtual certainty that growers within a profitable hauling distance from Nyssa could make the plant run to capacity on a 24 hour basis during the season. Some day there will be a cannery here, and for an organization that knows its business, it is certain to be a success. It will be a lucky day when the first cannery starts operation in Nyssa—lucky for the owners, lucky for the growers and lucky for the business and commercial interests of Nyssa.

Homes and Gardens

By Mrs. C. W. Barrett

I was in town today and met a gentleman on the street who chided me for not saying more about trees last week. He wanted to know how many sorts of trees are growing in Oregon, so I thought I would re-write my column and tell him a little more about trees. Oregon has 69 species of trees. One man on the Pacific coast says there are 594 different kinds of trees in the United States. Another man in the eastern states says there are 387 different sorts in the United States—pretty far apart aren't they? Now I believe the man on the coast is referring to trees that grow a great size while the man in the east is counting everything that can be called a tree. In the part of the east where I was raised there was a great number of small growing trees, a few I will name: Spicewood, Dogwood, Poplar, blackhaw, hackberry tree, sourwood and many others. There are 67 varieties of oak trees, 69 varieties of magnolia. The deciduous magnolia will grow here. They grow in other states where the temperature goes 25 below zero but they have to have a very deep mulch at the base of the tree in severe cold weather as they have hundreds of fine fibrous roots that can't stand the cracking and heaving of the soil around them so must have a deep mulch to keep the ground from cracking.

Several cities over the United States have started what is called a museum. They set aside a tract of land and collect different sorts of trees from all over the States and from foreign lands. A few years ago the Portland city council gave the city poor farm 130 acres over to a tree museum. There has been roads and trails made and they already have quite a few foreign trees as well as many native ones.

G. W.—I am afraid your problem is out of the line of anything I had expected to be called on to discuss but will advise you the best I can. If you intend to make everything else in your bedroom over to match your new green bedspread you are lucky the walls were to be kalsmined this spring anyway. I would do the walls in ivory and paint the woodwork a shade darker ivory; as the old paint is white it should make a good foundation for the ivory paint. The white curtains you have will do but you will have to take the blue shade from your bed lamp and recover it with green. Cover the cushions in rocker with cretonne with background having design of green and yellow. The baby's white crib would fit in with the curtains but while you are painting the woodwork you could do the crib in ivory too. This will make a very pretty bedroom, at least it will be better than it stands now. I do not think you foolish—it is very natural for people to get nervous over such things but as soon as you get this disagreeable color covered up with the ivory you will find it restful and a easy color to live with.
