WOOL GROWERS GET THEIR CHECKS

Several hundred wool growers in Eastern Oregon, Eastern Washington and Idaho who are members of the Pacific Wool Growers have additional cause for "thankfulness" this week in the final settlement statements and checks they are receiving from their co-operative association on wool delivered during the spring and summer. These growers received from 17c to 20c as cash advances.

Practically all of the pool now being closed was sold during the past few weeks, since the wool market improved, according to R. A. Ward, manager of the Pacific Wool Growers. Practically no wool was sold on the dull market during the summer as the Association anticipated, in view of its survey of the statistical position of wool, better prices during the fall period.

The average prices growers received for their lighter-shinking, brighter wools was from 29c to as high as 31½ c per pound, the better prices going to those members whose wools were all of medium grades. Slightly lower prices were received by growers in the territory where the wools are somewhat darker in color and heavier in shrinkage, their returns ranging from 25c to 27c per pound.

The wool pool that has just been closed is made up of farm flock and ranch wools which were graded into mill-sized lines, and the prices received by members are based on the average prices received for the various grades of wool of similar quality and shrinkage. The larger clips delivered by range members to the Association are sold in the original bag direct to mills and settlement is made to the grower as soon as the sale is made.
