Regarding Mr. Steward the Portland Journal says as follows: "H. B. Steward, whose devotion to the American flag was a patriotic example for four generations at Jefferson high school to follow, is dead."

"For 12 years Mr. Steward was assistant janitor at the school, and every day in that time he kept the rule of lowering the flag at sundown and raising it with the sun. Old Glory always was reverently at half-mast with the death of a prominent local or national figure."

"Then he was hurt, an accident which caused the amputation of a leg and he left the school's employ. But as soon as his health permitted he returned daily to the school to continue his vigil of the flag."

"With the death of his immediate superior, Janitor Thomas McKenna, Mr. Steward immediately sought permission from the present janitor, Gus Quirk, to continue his ritual. Permission was granted and despite a one-leg handicap and inclement weather, Mr. Steward daily raised the flag on high."
