London, Capital of England

London has been the capital of England since the Roman occupation of the First century A. D. Prior to that the Saxon city which now bears the name of Colchester was the capital.

Random Shots . . .

(Oregon News Bureau)

While some complained about the continued variety of Oregon weather that on a recent day included a gentle snow, biting hail snow, a period of warming sunshine and bluster, driving rain, many hundreds others gathered on the slopes of Mount Hood last Sunday to pay tribute to Queen Rose Winkler and participate in the winter sports carnival. Special police staffs were necessary to control the heavy traffic incident to thousands of city dwellers sojourning for the day in the greatest winter playground in the west.

Portland furnaces that have been attuned to the use of sawdust have gone old-fashioned again and are consuming plain, every day cordwood. As the result of the recent maritime strike shut-down sawmills have exhausted their supply of sawdust. Oil burner salesmen have been rapping a harvest as a result.

When snow-bound Pingah home near Scappoose ran out of supplies last week-end the road crews found the task of breaking through too much for them, so more than 2000 pounds of food were dropped from airplanes that the unfortunate quartered there might be fed.

J. L. Chittim, mayor of St. Helens recently put on his hat and walked out on his city council when they refused to back his choice for city attorney.

The American Red Cross, the American Legion and the Boy Scouts of America are the only organizations given charter by congress and recognized as service groups working for a better development of humanity and citizenship in the United States. In every picture we have seen these three groups working shoulder to shoulder. They are deserving of support.

If president Roosevelt is right about the "Nine Old Men" of the supreme court, what about the wisdom of the white-haired men of Athens—of Jerusalem—and what about Oliver Wendell Holmes who in his ninety-first year was as alert as a youth of 21? What about Uncle Joe Cannon and indeed some of the patriots of our educational institutions? If a man is in his prime in the fifties, is he over ripe in his seventies? It doesn't make sense.

ADRIAN NEWS

By MRS. CLARK ENOS

Mrs. Charles McConnell went to Boise Tuesday to visit her mother Mrs. Ellen Marker who has been under the doctor's care due to the flu.
