

Illumination of San Francisco Bridge Points to Greater Highway Safety

SAN FRANCISCO—At night the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge, one of the World's greatest engineering feats, is a marvel of beauty, illuminated with the new sodium lamps especially developed for visibility at night, it makes the use of headlights unnecessary. The illumination of the bridge is already being pointed out as an illustration of what can be done to diminish the terrible toll of death and accidents at night caused by poor visibility on our highways.

The California Toll Bridge Authority engaged for this installation the General Electric Company whose scientists have also produced an incandescent luminaire installed with great success on several important stretches of highway.

Modern illumination means that the great bridge will serve traffic as well by night as by day. One of the civic leaders of San Francisco pointed out the other day that the San Francisco Bay area is a single economic unit. With an estimated population of 1,898,092, its retail trade exceeds $98,000,000; wholesale trade amounts to $2,031,000,000; industrial output at the last census $786,000,000. Water borne commerce in 1934 amounted to $1,059,000,000, ranking the San Francisco Bay area second among all ports of the United States.

With this prodigious activity and the World's Fair coming on, the next step is to expedite the transfer of mail which is the very life blood of industry, between the great communities on either side of San Francisco Bay. Here again the great bridge comes into play for leaders are urging that the post office department install a pneumatic mail tube service across the San Francisco-Oakland Bridge. By this means they point out mail could be shot through the tubes at high speed between post offices on either side of the Bay. Pneumatic mail tubes have long been in operation across Brooklyn Bridge between Manhattan and the Brooklyn General Post Office at Borough Hall. A bill for the extension of this tube line to Floyd-Bennett Field, New York's municipal airport, is now before Congress.

Similarly, the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce is advocating a mail tube line to connect the Oakland Terminus of the bridge over to the million dollar airport site owned by the City of Alameda. By this step trans-continental or trans-Pacific air mail reaching the Alameda airport could be shot by compressed air through the pneumatic tubes, reaching the San Francisco post office in less than ten minutes after its arrival by plane.
