Return of the season of Roses is to find Portland offering what its sponsors claim will be the outstanding festival of all Portland Rose Festivals. The celebration is to start June 9 and last until June 13.

Events on the program will include the coronation of the festival queen amid a court setting that is expected to catch some of the spirit and splendor of the coronation scene soon to be presented in England. The famed floral parade which already has more outside entries—floats from distant cities—than ever before is to be on Friday morning, June 11. The rose show will repeat as a major part of its display the air-mail rose show, a display of flowers rushed to Portland by airplane from the four corners of the nation.

State Treasurer Holman has prepared a lengthy defense of the action of the state board in leasing 263,337 acres of school lands to former Senator R. N. Stanfield. Holman asserts that much of this land formerly brought no income but was used by stockmen who paid nothing for it. That it belongs to the state schools and should be used for their benefit. He declares that some minor parts of the total taken by Stanfield might be leased for more than the bid which was accepted but that the state will profit in the by the present arrangement. In the mean time there was a conference last Saturday at Burns at which federal and state grazing experts got together to outline a long-time grazing land policy. Their program is still in the making.
