Middle Age Men Small
In the Middle Ages men were small. The suits of armor in the Tower of London indicate that the people who wore them were not more than 5 feet 6 inches or 5 feet 8 inches in height. The families of the upper classes had to undergo a severe physical training.

Education of Children
Education of children is not an external thing, a writing upon blank paper, a planting of selected seed in receptive soil, but an inward growth, sustained and stimulated by experiences and activities of many kinds, the response to the whole of the child's surroundings.
