Yaks as Beasts of Burden

In the highlands of Asia, more particularly in Tibet, the natives use yaks as beasts of burden. They are heavy, shaggy creatures, sure-footed but slow. In Kashmir they cross the yak with the native cow, and have produced an animal called the zomb or zol, which is a faster walker than the yak.

There's a Reason For the Money They Spend . . .

Week after week, month after month, the merchants of this community place column upon column of advertising in this newspaper. Each different department takes its turn in the small and large advertisements that are prepared by these progressive stores.

Why, you say, do they advertise so extensively? A moment's reflection and you have the answer. What would you do if they didn't advertise? How would you compare values and prices?

Yes, it would take days of searching, hours of weary looking and comparing. But with a parade of values and merchandise descriptions right before your eyes, you can accomplish in a half hour's reading what would otherwise tax your endurance and patience.

There's reason for the money they spend—and the reason is to help you choose easily . . . quickly . . . intelligently, the things you need and want. That's why it pays to read the Journal advertisements.
