HOWDY FRIENDS: A Nyssa friend who toured the South says there were two signs which he saw that he never forgot. One was on the only restaurant in a small town and it said boldly, "Eat here stranger or we both starve."

The other one was on a road along a soggy swamp. It read, "When this sign is under water, this road is impassable."

A rural resident had just made the final payment to the realtor for a small farm he had bought.

"That's fine, George," said the business man, "and now I'll make out a deed for you."

"Thanks," said George, "but if it's all the same to you I'd rather you'd make me out a mortgage on the place instead of a deed."

"But George, you don't seem to know the difference between a deed and a mortgage."

"Well, all I know is that one time before I bought a place, and I had a deed and a bank had a mortgage, and the bank got the place."
