An OUTSTANDING Beet Puller

SUCCESSFUL sugar beet growers know that the profits from the crop depend largely on the method of harvesting. The important thing is to loosen all of the beets, with damage to as few roots as possible.

The John Deere lifting blades, are designed to get all of the beets, large and small, with the least amount of damage. The blades work along the row, breaking the soil and lifting the beets several inches, leaving the beets upright in the most convenient position for handling. The beets are not exposed to sun and frost.

The No. 23 will handle beets in rows from 18 inches to 28 inches apart. It is regularly furnished with 14-inch rolling coulters

7 Points of Superiority

1. Does Not Break Beets
2. Easy to Steer.
3. Light Draft
4. Easy to Lift.
5. Frame Is Rigid and Strong.
6. Seat Near to the Ground.
7. New-Type, Adjustable Lifting Points.
