T.B. Threatens Young Women

Leading Statistician States Latest Facts On This Serious Situation

"Leading tuberculosis authorities call tuberculosis the foe of youth," says Miss Jessamine S. Whitney, statistician of the National Tuberculosis Association, "but I go even further and call it the foe of girls and young women. Why? Because the deaths from tuberculosis among them are one and one-half times as many as those among their brothers of the same age."

The death rate from tuberculosis has been cut to less than one-third of what it was thirty years ago when it was the leading cause of death. Yet when we analyze these deaths we find that tuberculosis is still the leading cause of death for men and women between 15 and 45 years of age and we also find that among young women between 15 and 30 one in every four deaths is from this highly contagious disease.

Miss Whitney in answering why tuberculosis is twice as prevalent among young women as among young men says, "No one knows. Today it is an outstanding mystery in public health."

In an attempt to solve this mystery the National Tuberculosis Association made a careful study of the life histories of all girls between 15 and 25 who died from tuberculosis in a single year in Detroit and in New York City. Industrialization did not affect their health because 35 per cent had never been employed outside their homes and 29 per cent had been employed less than a year. Dieting, clothing habits, their educational levels were all discarded as clues to the mystery.

A recent study of one of the New York City tuberculosis clinics did show, however, that the young women who lived in homes where there was a person sick with tuberculosis were very remiss in getting proper examination of themselves.

"Every case of tuberculosis comes from another," Miss Whitney further says.

"We know that our chief concern for the present, therefore, is to make mothers and fathers realize the necessity of having their daughters go to the doctor for periodic physical examinations. If we can catch the disease early we can nearly always cure it. Do this," concludes Miss Whitney, "and we tuberculosis statisticians can all go out of business. This public health mystery will have solved itself."
