Advice To The Road-Worn

E. W. PRUYN, Auto Repair
Nyssa, Oregon
Gentlemen:

I have never been so embarrassed in my life, and what is more, I am socially undone! I did a terrible thing last week.

There I was, among all those fine, shiny models. People were admiring me. Fool that I was, I thought I had stolen the auto show.

Then they started me, and horrors, I spit! Yes, spit. Spit right there in front of all those cars and people. Spit is a horrid word. How I blushed when people began to titter and snicker.

Kinds sirs, I am at a loss. What can I ever do to regain my self-composure? Must I always hide myself in shame? I am afraid even to run again in public for fear of that horrid spitting.

Yours sadly,
Pansy Piston Pounder.

Dear Pansy Piston Pounder:
We are glad to say that yours is the simplest of cases. There is no need for you or any other car to spit. Adjusting carburetors and timing mechanisms is our strong suit here, and let us assure you that we do not even spit on our hands when we are working.

Yours very truly,
E. W. PRUYN, Auto Repair.
