STORY OF LAST BUCCANEER IS TOLD IN FILM

The word "Buccaneer" didn't come from "bringing home the bacon" but it almost did!

The word comes from "boucanier," a name given in the early seventeenth century to a colony of freebooters, escaped criminals, ne'er-do-wells and thieves who settled in the West Indies, when they were driven from other places and made a living by selling "boucan," a smoked ham, to seamen who happened to pass their island.

It wasn't long before the "boucaniers" were chased off the island by the Spanish and they put to sea as pirates, preying upon vessels from all nations, all over the world. They later made their headquarters in Madagascar and, in time, the word "boucanier" became "Buccaneer."

The last of the buccaneers was the amazing Jean Lafitte, who made his headquarters in Barataria, not far from New Orleans, in 1806. Strange as it may seem, Lafitte and his men were largely responsible for the defeat of the British at New Orleans in 1814 when they assisted General Jackson in that battle.

It is this event, and the romance of Lafitte, which inspired the Cecil B. DeMille epic, "The Buccaneer" which opens Sunday February 27 at the PIX Theatre in Ontario, with Fredric March in the title role supported by Francisca Gaal, Akim Tamiroff, Margot Grahame and a cast of over a thousand others.

Settled St. Augustine, Fla.

In 1513 Ponce de Leon, in search of the Fountain of Youth, seems to have visited the site of St. Augustine. In 1564 a company of French Huguenots passed there and settled a few miles to the north on the St. Johns river. Don Pedro Menendez de Aviles was sent by Philip II of Spain to expel the intruders and erected a fort at St. Augustine, in August, 1565. Upon his return from the St. Johns settlement, he established a settlement at St. Augustine.
