T. B. HOSPITAL PROSPECTS BRIGHTER

SALEM, Ore.—The Oregon Board of Control does not propose to be caught napping if and when President Roosevelt launches his next pump priming experiment. Instructions have been given to begin the rounding up of state projects that might qualify for federal grants. The board has already signified its readiness to sponsor two building projects if federal aid is forthcoming. One of these is the proposed new tuberculosis hospital to be located in Multnomah county. The 1st legislature appropriated $110,000 for this project contingent upon a $90,000 federal grant. Uncle Sam's pump became dry before the sponsors of the hospital got their bid in but they are now standing in line waiting for the new flood of government money to start. Another project which has the board's approval is an open air pavilion at The Dalles hospital for the accommodation of children afflicted with tuberculosis. Since the national administration launched its new spending proposal it has begun to be whispered around in official circles that Oregon needs another new office building in Salem. This need has been apparent for some time but because of the state's financial condition no serious consideration has so far been given to it as a project of the immediate future. If federal aid comes available, however, it is very

THE LAST POLITICAL BLURB—FOR A WHILE

On the even of Oregon's primary election the outcome of a number of major contests remain very much in doubt. About the only point on which all political commentators seem able to agree is that Friday's balloting will bring out the largest vote ever recorded at a nominating election in this state. Especially is the Democratic vote expected to be heavy in view of the intense interest manifested in the gubernatorial race. Of the 248,169 Democrats who are registered it is predicted that approximately 150,000 or 60 per cent will go to the polls. With somewhat less interest in the Republican campaign it is not probable that the vote in that camp will exceed 50 per cent of the 265,132 registration or 132,500. With both Governor Martin and Henry Hess claiming the Democratic nomination for governor it is pretty generally conceded that the outcome of this contest will be decided in Multnomah county. Governor Martin is expected to sweep the outstate counties for a plurality of at least 15,000 votes. In eastern Oregon, unprejudiced observers predict, the governor will receive majorities in 16 of the 18 counties comprising the second congressional district. Hess is expected to carry his home county of Union and possibly Klamath county with its large block of union labor votes. In the first congressional district the political map is somewhat more spotted. Governor Martin is expected to carry all of the Willamette valley counties with the possible exception of Clackamas where the Hess forces appear to be pretty strongly entrenched. Martin is also reported to be well out ahead in southern Oregon. On the other hand Hess is showing unusual strength in the lower Columbia counties of Columbia and Clatsop and in some of the coast counties, particularly Lincoln and Coos. If, as the Hess supporters claim, the Union county Democrat can pile up a lead of 15,000 or better in Multnomah county he has at least a 50-50 chance to win the nomination. If, on the other hand, Martin can break even in Multnomah county, his nomination is assured by a plurality of at least 15,000 votes.

The Republican gubernatorial contest remains a race between Charles A. Sprague, Salem newspaperman, and Sam Brown, the Gervais farmer. Sprague is expected to receive the bulk of the conservative vote while Brown is depending largely upon the support of the more liberal element. Clarence Wagoner of Portland and Charles L. Paine of Eugene are also expected to poll a substantial vote.

Willis Mahoney appears to be leading Carl Donagh in the race for the Democratic nomination for United States senator. Both candidates are running on New Deal platforms but Mahoney has the advantage of better vote getting qualities and a larger state-wide acquaintance. On the Republican side of this picture State Treasurer Rufus C. Holman looks like an easy winner over Robert N. Stanfield. Indications point to the nomination of James W. Mott, incumbent, by the Republicans over Walter Norblad of Astoria, while Andrew C. Burk, Marion county sheriff appears to be well out in front of his two rivals, Earl A. Nott of McMinnville and W. T. Miller of Grants Pass, for the Democratic nomination. In the second district Walter M. Pierce, incumbent, looks like an easy winner over Wade Crawford of Klamath Falls for the Democratic nomination. On the Republican ticket the picking is a Hobson's choice with three candidates in the field, none of them well known outside their own counties.

AND MALHEUR NEEDS ROADS TO BEAUTIFY

The board of control has agreed to ask the state highway commission for an appropriation of $3000 to finance a program of roadside beautification. The program is being sponsored by the Oregon Roadside council. Money set aside for this purpose by the state will be matched by the federal government. A committee from the council told the board at a meeting here this week.

A RAISE IN PAY THROUGH SHORTER HOURS

Employees in all state institutions will be placed on a 44-hour week basis next year if recommendations to be made by Governor Martin meet with the approval of the legislature. Most institution employees now work 12 hours a day for six days a week. The governor's proposal for a shorter work week will practically double the number of employees at some institutions.
