EMPLOYMENT SHOWS STATEWIDE PICKUP, DIRECTOR REPORTS

SALEM, Ore. — Employment in Oregon during the past few months has been on the upswing, two state officials reported this week.

Guy V. Lintner, director of the Oregon State Employment service, said the number employed during June would show an increase over previous months of 1938. He credited the upswing in jobs to resumed sawmill operations in Marshfield and Klamath Falls, the pea harvest in Pendleton, the seasonal work in other parts of the state.

J. C. Joy, chairman of the state industrial accident commission, reported that the number of men working in May in Oregon industries under the workmen's compensation law had increased since February. The total April payroll was larger than the payroll during the same period last year. However, the number employed is below the number of last October when the high mark since 1929 was reached.

FILL THE TANK SIZE?

Motorists get plenty of attention at filling stations which employed 177,128 attendants in addition to 179,870 active proprietors and firm members, at the last Business Census. The 197,568 filling stations reported sales totaling $1,967,714.

CAPITOL BUILDING COMPLETE, ACCEPTED BY COMMISSION

SALEM, Ore. — One building of the state capitol group was completed and another formally started this week.

The 2,500,000 modernistic capitol was accepted for the state from the contractors by the capitol reconstruction commission after a thorough inspection. The building will be open for public inspection on the afternoon of July 2 and all day July 3. State departments are expected to move into the new structure shortly after July 1. Formal dedication has been postponed until the opening day of the 1939 legislature.

Shortly before the commission started on its inspection tour, Governor Martin laid the cornerstone for the new $1,000,000 state library now under construction. The structure, across the street from the new capitol, will be completed January 1.

At the cornerstone ceremony the governor told the crowd of about 100 to "move in closer. I want you to hear this speech. I won't be making them much longer." He then praised the state's progressiveness in library planning and building during the past 50 years.

Hardly had his words faded away than the official inspection of the new capitol started. Francis Keally, New York architect, who designed the building, ushered the reconstruction commission from the dome to the basement.

The building is completely bare of furniture with the exception of the house and senate chambers. The two big assembly rooms are now carpeted and equipped with oak desks for each member, as well as theatre-style seats in the spectators' balconies. The seats for the senators and representatives have not yet arrived. Furniture from the present offices will be used until next fall when the new furnishings arrive.

The contract for completion of the structure is not complete despite the acceptance. There are still two stone statue groups to be installed in front of the building flanking the broad steps, and a gigantic statue of an early pioneer to surmount the tower on top of the building. Mural work, painting and other details will be finished later.
