

WEEDS LIKENED TO BAD HABITS IN NEW BOOKLET

The perennial weed is likened to a bad habit, which seems harmless until it becomes so entrenched that getting rid of it is difficult. Continuing this analogy, Oregon cultivated land is made up of 1 1/2 per cent of bad habits, according to estimates in the latest and most comprehensive weed bulletin issued by the extension service at Oregon State college.

The new and profusely illustrated bulletin is not the last word on the control of perennial weeds in Oregon, but it is the latest printed word, and one which is likely to become a textbook on this subject until such time as weed control research provides better methods than are now known. The bulletin is credited to five authors, E. R. Jackson, extension agronomist, and his assistant, Lawrence Jenkins; C. A. Henderson, W. A. Holt and H. G. Avery, county agents in Klamath, Umatilla and Union counties respectively.

Supplementing the bulletin itself is a series of illustrated leaflets which describe 51 different weeds found in Oregon.

"So far there is no royal way to weed control," the bulletin points out. "The weeds stubbornly refuse to abdicate unless stern and unrelenting methods are applied. These methods are expensive in either time, money or both."

The bulletin discusses the various methods of the chemical control now used, control by cultivation, by smothering, by pasturing, by seedling to permanent crops and various combinations of these control methods. Suggestions are made for a county weed control program, and digests are printed of both the Oregon gon weed and seed control laws. In addition to the regular text, the bulletin contains scores of letters from growers, giving their actual experiences with different methods of weed control.

SPRAYING GETS PRUNE THIRPS

McMINNVILLE—That prune thrips can be controlled by well-timed nicotine sprays has been demonstrated on the farms of Ed Swift of McMinnville and Roy Fryer at Yamhill. Mr. Swift sprayed according to spray notices issued by the entomology department at OSC through County Agent Rex Warren's office. An excellent crop is developing on the sprayed part of his orchard, which on the unsprayed check plot there is practically no crop. On Mr. Fryer's farm, which was sprayed as a demonstration, results are similar, County Agent Warren reports.

IRRIGATED LADINO YIELDS HIGH

ALBANY—The value of the irrigation-ladino clover combination to the dairyman is being proved again and again throughout the Willamette valley. County Agent F. C. Mullen of Albany reports that John Zimbrich of Lebanon pastured 15 cows all spring on five acres of ladino, and obtained six tons of clover for hay. Curtis Garner, route 3, Corvallis, pastured 22 cows all spring on 8 acres of ladino, without feeding hay or silage, and E. A. Chambers of Albany is pasturing

COW HOLLOW

By The Happy Farmer

Most everybody in Cow Hollow has their second cutting of hay in the stack now. Doc Rafinton has his latest seeding in the shock yet.

Jim Trummel has his new hay derrick up and it worked fine. Jim is the first one in Cow Hollow to have a hay derrick.

Mrs. Dale Linbaugh's sister from Emmett is spending the week with her.

Dude Parker and Elza Niccum are making a flying trip to the hills for a load of poles. Dude's day on a 40 mile feeder route for the Co-op creamery and he expects to return from the route about 3:30 o'clock and go to the hills, cut his poles and return the next day so as to go on the cream route again.

so it will indeed be a flying trip. The poles are very useful on all this new land.

Clarence Niccum traded with Bill Parker for a weaner pig the first of the week and bringing the pig home just at dark he had no pen to put it in, so he just put it in an empty tin barrel, until morning. Next morning the small boy came running down to the lot where Clarence was milking and say "Daddy the pig jumped out of the barrel and they want you to come and help catch it." But Clarence, thinking the pig would stay around the house, finished his milking and returned to find the pig had left and gotten into the grain field. So he told his nearest neighbors and just expected to watch and wait until the pig showed up somewhere. That night after dark Russel Howell, the canal patrolman drove into his yard with the pig in the back of his car. The little pig had quit the grain field and taken out through the sagebrush and traveled almost two miles. That pig was actually going places.

Clarence was glad to get his pig back but he has an awful time making people believe the pig jumped out of a fifty gallon tin barrel, he swears that most of the kiddies were still in bed and those that were up were accounted for so the little pig must of gotten out alone.

Frank Parker and Russel Howell have been hauling hay up the valley this week. Neither of them have alfalfa to cut at home yet and are getting it from their neighbors while they can get in the field.

Mrs. Heaton and Mrs. Limbaugh spent Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. Chuck Share.

Sam Cates ran across an old friend of his Saturday at Nyssa. The friend was out here from Oklahoma looking for a location and neither knew the other was in Oregon.
