Dirndl Is Leader Among Juveniles

The dirndl may be dwindling in popularity with the grown-up fashion leaders but it continues to hold first place in juvenile styles for the coming season. Many coats as well as dresses designed for little girls from three to six years old show the peasant influence.

One coat that is typical of the trend is made of royal blue velvet and has a fitted basque top to which is attached a very full shirred skirt section. A little collar of gray squirrel fastens snugly at the throat. Another coat similarly styled is made of wine red wool velour and has cordings of the fabric trimming the dirndl skirt.

Leather Hats Are New Fall Fashion

Leather hats have come to town as spice for the fashion menu.

Lily Dache makes them of kid and suede in such colors as elephant gray, rural autumn (a rich maple leaf red) down blue (green blue) and beet root (a deep dark red) as well as the regulation shades trimmed with bright colors. She sends them out with gloves of the same color to wear now with dark frocks and later with fall suits.

New Fall Color

"Tabac" brown, more mellow in its tone than most browns, is off to a good start in the early collections. Maggy Rouff combines it with maroon and deep sage green to make a "mosaic" winter coat formed by pieced-together squares of the three colors.
