DOUBLE CELEBRATION

Christmas day was a double celebration for Dr. and Mrs. C. A. Abbott for the day was the silver anniversary of their wedding and added to this was the happiness over Dr. Abbott's rapid recovery from his recent critical illness.

Dr. and Mrs. Abbott with Mrs. Arvilla Fauchier and Aunt Mattie Thomason were guests on that day of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Roberts and their son Harold in Parma.

The same table decoration were used as those which graced the wedding dinner table twenty five years ago. Red carnations centered the table with red tapers in the original crystal candle sticks at each end. Red and silver were also repeated in the tree ornamentation.

A sumptuous turkey dinner was served where the dessert was a plum pudding topped with a hard sauce snowman wearing a rakish hat trimmed in red and green gum drops.

It was a good race and we won the first quarter on the last lap of 1938 hands down, going away. Thank you for making Peggy's Pantry so popular. "A sweet place to meet."

We're busy now grooming a new filly and cooking up new dishes for 1939. They'll be appetizing, delicious, toothsome and tantalizing—keep on comin'—we like you too—

As to Knitting a Chic Fall Sweater

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

IT'S time to knit! Or do you happen to be a crocheter instead of a knitter? Either way you do it, it's time to make one of the perfectly charming sweaters here pictured.

We'll wager that at sight of these ultra chic and fascinating sweater fashions your fingers will begin to tingle, your heart action quicken as a sudden urge sweeps o'er you to clickety click those knitting needles of yours faster than they ever clicked before. Or, if perchance, it's a crochet needle you wield, we've an idea it's going to go at a rapid pace to complete a "darling" sweater like the crocheted model shown above to the right in the illustration, for of course you will be wanting to have it ready to wear with the new fall suit. The other two sweaters in the picture are knitted.

We agree with you, this trio of hand-made sweaters certainly have a chic and charm about them that is far beyond the ordinary. Not that there is anything complicated about the knitting and crocheting of 'em, for each of the models is really very simple to make.

"Sweaters this year," comes word from Paris, "will be new because of their departure from the conventional." Short, just over the hipbone is the foreword that reaches us in regard to the new fall sweaters. Many are slide fastened for mostly everything is being zippered among the new fashions that can be zipped. The majority of new sweaters have low necks.

The band-and-bow trim that gives such dainty feminine detail to the sweater pictured above to the right in the group is definitely new. It affords a grand opportunity to carry out a two-color scheme which is something to take note of, considering that bicolor treatments are highly important in the current stylizing program. The three bands of contrasting color are fastened with bows made of tufts of fringe formed of the identical mercerized crochet cotton used to make the sweater. You'll love this band-and-bow trimming the more you wear your sweater.

The jacket-like sweater blouse above to the left has that air of sophisticated simplicity about it that every woman versed in the art of smart costuming covets. It is knit of knit-croch in an open-work stitch interspersed with solid blocks that gives a sort of plaided effect. This sweater is the type that looks just as well when you remove your jacket as it does with the jacket on. Make it up in one of the lovely new muted colors and you will find it an indispensable and flattering accessory. The square neck line is a high-style feature. So also are the crochet buttons up the front. Most fashion reports have much to say in regard to the flair for buttons running to larger rather than small this season.

With word emanating from Paris that "it's a year for sweaters in versatile styles," cardigans get headline attention. Variety in cardigan styles is the new mandate, but it must be "variety without fussiness." A cardigan type that embodies all of Paris' sweater dictates is the short-sleeved one shown below. It is knit and crocheted of lustrous mercerized cotton. Work it up in a contrast of your two favorite colors.

PLAN KITCHENS FOR USE, SAYS O.S.C. SPECIALIST

The first consideration in planning a kitchen for a Willamette valley farm house is the needs and habits of the family using it, points out Miss Maud Wilson, O.S.C. home economist, in a recent bulletin entitled, "The Willamette Valley Farm Kitchen." Whether any or all meals are eaten in the kitchen, whether there are small children who play in the kitchen, whether laundering, ironing, canning and similar work is done in the kitchen and similar factors all affect the size and arrangement of this important room.

In planning the storage space, Miss Wilson explains that the method of storage, whether it be in bins, drawers or shelves, should be suited to the shape, size, weight and character of the material to be stored.

Each kitchen has several activity centers. The sink center for instance includes the sink itself, drain boards, space for handling soiled dishes, as well as foods that require washing, and space for the garbage container and kitchen stool. The stove center includes the stove and also adjacent unheated surface where short mixing jobs can be done, as well as space for fuel, food supplies and equipment most often used at the stove. The mixing center provides a surface of the proper height for preparing bread, pastry, etc., space for the meat and pastry boards, and other supplies and equipment usually used there.

The serving center provides the surface for bread cutting, filling dishes and other utensils and supplies that may be needed there. The dining center will have a table and chairs, a nearby surface for placing trays, and storage for silver and linen, electrical appliances used at meal times, and articles such as salt shakers and sugar bowl that do not require washing or filling after each meal.

Another desirable arrangement is table or desk for writing, shelves for books and files and drawers for paper. Space for a draft cooler is needed, as well as for a refrigerator, if one is used.

The bulletin and other aids to farm home planning may be had free from any extension office.
