An Electric Water System Is Second Most Vital Farm Need

Hot and cold running water helps make kitchen work easier.

By IRA MILLER
Rural Electrification Bureau

AS is but natural, to most farm families who never have known its advantages in their own homes, the coming of electricity primarily means clean, steady, safe, ample and instantly available light. Although a modern radio, without batteries, really means second only to lights in the average farmer's electrical desires, an automatic water system actually is second in importance. For running water, under pressure, in his home and farm buildings contributes immeasurably more to his health, comfort, convenience, safety and profit.

An electric water system will pay for itself many times over in labor savings alone. The average farm home requires from 20 to 30 tons of water per year for kitchen use only, and which must be added the large quantities needed each wash day and for bathing. Although the labor of pumping and carrying such a tremendous amount of water always is an unpleasant burden, it is particularly so when rain, snow, ice and winter winds make each frequent trip to well, spring or cistern an unpleasant and often dangerous journey.

An automatic water supply guards the family's health by providing clean, fresh water at all times. It promotes better living and pride of ownership as it makes possible not only a modern bathroom with all of its many conveniences and comforts but also a kitchen sink, laundry tubs and hot water at the turn of a faucet.

A pressure water system is a definite safety precaution as it provides a means of saving the farm home or barn in event of fire. The old bucket brigade seldom is a success, as is proved by the fact that nearly three-quarters of all property involved in rural fires is completely destroyed.

With an electric water system, ample water to irrigate small or large truck gardens may be pumped from wells, streams, springs or pools—a most valuable form of "crop insurance" when drought occurs. In fact, the profit on or saving of such crops will pay for the electricity used many times over.

Plenty of fresh water also will increase profits from livestock—animals will finish better, both cows and chickens will produce more, horses and mules will do more work, and there is less danger of contaminated milk if the floors of the dairy barn and milk room are flushed daily.

With all of its advantages, an automatic electric water system costs only a little more than a large all-wave radio, though plumbing fixtures and supplies are additional items of expense. Naturally, operating costs vary with the quantity of water used, the depth from which it is pumped and the cost of power. However, on the average farm all the water necessary to satisfy every human and animal need can be electrically supplied at an operating cost of three to five cents a day—frequently less.
