Ice skating is made possible all year and on the floor of any building by a newly invented artificial ice. High temperature melts Iceolite into a liquid which, poured an inch thick on a floor, hardens into a smooth surface so durable it will last for years. Professional skaters who tested it at its world debut in Toledo, Ohio, declared it to be as fast as natural ice.—Christian Science Monitor.

Light flows through rods made of Lucite, a du Pont plastic, as water flows through a pipe. This piped light emerges at the far end undiminished, even after turning sharp corners. Moreover, it is cold light. Lucite does not transmit heat.

An important use for the new plastic is in surgery. Lucite instruments, with electric bulbs in the handle, can be used to illuminate body cavities and incisions without risk of burning tissues. Easily softened in hot water, Lucite is made into surgical splints of any desired shape; thereafter X-ray examinations of knitting fractures can be made without removing the splints, a thing never possible before.

Reflectors made of Lucite, installed along both edges of an 85-mile Michigan highway, are found to be ten times as efficient as glass reflectors. The light from such reflectors penetrates fog, is visibly beyond the glow of oncoming headlights, and outlines the road for a mile ahead.
