ONION GOOD

ARCADIA (Special)—The onion crop in this community is well under way and there have been some especially fine yields reported.

At the Joe Dirkson ranch in a patch of less than three acres there have been 1115 sacks of onions over three inches in diameter.

POULTRY

---And Its Care

Give growing pullets plenty of eating and drinking space all during the summer months, recommends Al Thompson and Son, local distributor of Checkerboard feeds.

"Summer is the important time in a pullet's life—the time when she develops her body to be in shape for the fall egg harvest," says this feed merchant. "To do this she must have plenty of hopper space and the mash hoppers from which she eats must be kept filled with a growing mash that is known to produce large, sturdy pullets.

"Allowing 4 inches of hopper space per bird, or one Purina all-metal feeder for every 20 birds, will enable pullets to eat enough mash for steady growth and maximum development. Of course, plenty of fresh, clean drinking water must be supplied to help the birds make proper use of the mash they eat.

"The feeding of growing mash in checker form on top of the regular mash is another big help toward getting enough feed into the pullets," this feed merchant says. "Made of compressed, growth-producing mash, Growena Checkers promote a faster feed intake. These checkers should be fed both morning and evening—all that the birds can clean up in about an hour. When scattered over the regular mash late in the evening, they enable the birds to go to roost with full crops.

"To further increase summer feed consumption, plenty of shade on clean, well-drained ground should be provided for the pullets and their feed hoppers; and the drinking water should be kept before them, right where they spend most of their time during the day."
